The Most Fuckable Person at this Vehicular Manslaughter

by Xenakis (IceRosesCrown)

Summary

Castaspella was driving at a completely normal speed, about to cross green traffic lights when she had the not-so-bright idea of searching for a CD to play…
Shadow Weaver was nonchalantly walking, about to cross the street regardless of the red light, when the incoming driver had that terrible idea…

Or

Castaweaver version in which the text message was sent by Castaspella, while the one being hit and claiming she's the "most fuckable person at this vehicular manslaughter" and who popped her shoulder back in place is Shadow Weaver

Notes

Man, this was SO MUCH FUN pleaseeeee

Many many thanks to Tippen for sharing that Tumblr post and starting the Shoulder Popping Tour lol

So, I still feel like I suck at writing comedy, but I tried, and I did laugh at my own writing, so here's hoping you will too :D

See you in the end notes with story time!!!!

See the end of the work for more notes

It was late in the afternoon when Shadow Weaver received an interesting message.

Her initial confusion and disbelief was quickly discarded in exchange for amusement; she immediately screenshot the message and sent it to one of her oldest friends.

Her only “friend”, actually.

After reading it a second time, she rested back on her chair while cackling. She didn’t know what could be funnier, the message she got, or the face Angella would surely pull when reading it too.

Just as imagined, when Angella left her workplace a while later, she checked her messages with such little idea of what she could find, that she had to stop on her tracks and reboot her brain.

After answering with a string of question-marks, Angella sat down on a bench and read it again:

> Hey, it’s Esmeralda, the gal who hit you with her car. Sorry if this is inappropriate but would you wanna get dinner or coffee or lunch or a drink or something where I open doors for you & buy you consumable goods sometime? I promise not to run over you ever again 🥺 I just don’t know many women who can pop their own shoulder back & make a joke while doing it. Ur very cute.

The emoji there was so… cringe-inducing.

Except that she knew who this person was and it was exactly what she’d expect her to write. Angella considered it was strange that Micah didn’t mention his sister had apparently hit someone on the road… until she remembered Castaspella tends to be quite reserved about stuff she’s ashamed of.

She’d probably deny it if Angella asked her.

In any case, that made the woman remember she just read that Shadow Weaver had popped her shoulder back in place and almost dropped her phone as she rushed to ask her if she was fine.

To which the old hag replied:

> As if you cared

How rude!

Fine! If she’d be a jerk about it, then she’d better just roll her eyes and wait until Shadow Weaver actually asked for her opinion.

She wouldn't dare admit it, but Shadow Weaver kept thinking about that hilarious message until she went to sleep… and it kept her awake.

Eventually, she gave up on trying to sleep and messaged Angella.

She knew the angelic being would be asleep at that time, but she did not care in the slightest.

Angella

Answer

Should I message her back?

It's 2am!

I know

So I need to solve this or I can't sleep

And you wake ME up for that!?

Obviously

You and your ancient knowledge

You're being sarcastic. I can almost see you smirking

What the fuck do you want, Beatrix?

Should I message her back?

It was the first thing I asked

You should, I guess?

Not now though!

Fine, I'll answer in the morning

What will you say?

You mean whether I'll accept the date offer?

I was about to ask for your opinion

So now you want it!?

I am explicitly asking

Fine!

Look, we're talking about someone several years younger than you

So… maybe not?

Angella, is she a legal adult?

Yes! How else would she be driving!?

Then I think I'll accept

Why did you ask me in the first place!?

I hate that I can visualize the mockery in your face!

Always a pleasure making you angry

Fuck off now!

Wait, one more thing:
What does the "V" stand for?

How did you save her contact?

She only said her name was Esmeralda

So I saved her as "Esmeralda Vehicularmanslaughter"

What the actual fuck!?

Did someone die!?

No

Then why the fuck did you save her like that!?

Take a guess…

It's just you and your dramatic ass again, isn't it!?

You read that message
Does it or does it not mean I'm the most fuckable person at this vehicular manslaughter!?

It does NOT!

Mhmm, sure…

Someone's jealous

I am NOT!!!

Be serious!
Do you know her surname!?

Snickering, Shadow Weaver put her phone down without answering, and decided to try to sleep again, now a bit calmer.

Meanwhile, on the other end, Angella looked completely frustrated to the point she considered it'd be her who'd lose sleep that night. She then looked to her left at Micah, soundly asleep.

Should she ask him about whether Castaspella mentioned hitting someone with her car?

No, no…

And bringing up that message she sent Shadow Weaver would be an even worse idea.

The old woman woke up quite early the following morning.

She would never admit it, but her shoulder actually hurt quite a lot still, and the pain woke her up.

Well, who cared? She certainly didn't.

After freshening up and putting together a quick breakfast, Shadow Weaver returned to bed and picked up the phone to message Castaspella back.

Today 9:02

Bold of you to invite me without knowing how expensive my tastes are…

Oms, you replied!

Tell me you weren't looking at the phone waiting for my message

Then I won't tell you

Shadow Weaver face-palmed so hard it almost gave her a headache.

Was she really going to accept the invitation of this fool?

Ugh…

The old woman set aside her phone and decided to think it through a bit more while sipping her coffee.

Hmm… Perhaps she could? If anything, for the free food…

But what if she was some sort of creep?

Well, unlikely, but… She could always be one of those overbearing, insufferable women who won't even leave any room to breathe.

Oh, that was it!

She'd wait a few hours before answering. If she was unable to wait without insisting and texting to see if she "is angry" or something, then maybe she'd consider it.

Surprisingly, no.

Her phone did not buzz at all for the next two hours.

Today 9:02

Bold of you to invite me without knowing how expensive my tastes are…

Oms, you replied!

Tell me you weren't looking at the phone waiting for my message

Then I won't tell you

Today 11:10

Congrats, I see you're not desperate.

Oh, I…

I thought you probably wanted, like, time to think?

Or to have breakfast

I imagine you were…

Never mind

Relax. It was a test and you passed
As it seems you're not some insufferable hormonal teen, I suppose I can accept your offer.

Really!?

Yeah, yeah… Don't make a big deal of it

And I'm choosing the place.

Yeah! Of course!

Wait for my message

She sounded so foolish…

So naïve!

Yet, perhaps, that wasn't a bad thing.

It meant she'd be easy to manipulate, right?

Sure…

Meanwhile, back at her own small apartment, Castaspella sprawled across the couch.

Damn…

She couldn't believe how much of a mess she was.

Anyways!

She actually accepted!

Oh, she could hardly wait for that message…

What was she going to wear?

Well, probably depended on where they would go…

And if she chose somewhere super expensive!?

Where would she get the money from!?

She couldn't ask Micah…

Actually, she couldn't possibly let Micah know what happened!

Nope!

Never!

He'd be so upset…

Ugh! And now what!?

She was suddenly so anxious she couldn't even finish her breakfast, which, in any case, had probably gone cold already.

Castaspella was just so… so full of energy out of nowhere while also unable to move.

She hated feeling like this.

But also she absolutely hated that this feeling was because she invited someone out.

Oh Stars, she couldn't be like this for some random woman, could she!?

All because she… popped her own shoulder back with her bare hand and… and made a joke!?

Ugh, that was precisely what she said in her message, wasn't it?

Why!?

Why was she like this!?

—Alright, enough— she suddenly said.

With a great effort, because her position on the couch was far from normal, Castaspella finally stood up and forced herself to start her day properly without completely losing her brains for some… apparently badass old woman she hit with the car.

It took Shadow Weaver the whole day to finally decide.

There was this place Angella and Micah only went to on special occasions…

It was nice, quite fancy, expensive, and never too crowded.

Simply perfect.

And the time it took Castaspella to reply made her think she was, in fact, right to have chosen that place.

Was the little fool having doubts already? Would she keep pushing forward? Would she give up?

The answer she got was not what she expected.

Today 22:32

I've chosen

If your offer still stands, then we're going to Nobiru, in Mystacor District

Today 22:55

Oh my STARS!

Yes!

You know the place?

Absolutely!

Just tell me when!
I'll pick you up!

I'll meet you there
I don't trust your sloppy driving.

Mean!

Friday 8pm?

Perfect 🙂

Huh… Interesting.

The emoji was cringe, but… the answer was interesting.

So she knew the place, probably the price range… And still wants to invite her food there?

Oh, Shadow Weaver would have a feast.

Meanwhile, trying not to scream from joy at work, Castaspella was giggling as quietly as possible.

Oh, she couldn't wait!

Now she knew what to wear for the occasion, and… well, she'd probably have to call in a favour.

Good thing she had time to make preparations then!

For the old woman, it was nothing special.

It'd be free dinner, likely nothing more.

She supposed her bold date wouldn't want to see her ever again after all the money she'd likely have to spend on her…

So she arrived at Nobiru without expecting much.

The entrance was a beautiful wooden arch over a small red bridge with a tiny "river" running below it, over which a waiter welcomed guests.

—Good evening. Do you have a reservation?

—No, I don't think so…— she was replying, when she noticed movement behind him.

The door opened to reveal a woman in kimono whom she recognized a second too late.

—Oh, she's with me!— Castaspella told the waiter, who immediately let her in, no questions asked. —Good evening, Beatrix. I hope you don't mind I made reservations and arrived a bit earlier just in case— she giggled, guiding her to a table already set inside. She was very obviously nervous since she wouldn't stop talking. —I was going to ask for a table outside, but I think the night is a bit chilly and didn't know if you'd be alright with it, and…

—Esmeralda— Shadow Weaver stopped her. —You will die on the spot if you don't stop to breathe two seconds.

—Oh, sorry— she apologized, blushing furiously. After taking a deep breath, she moved the chair for the old woman and then took her seat in front of her. —You're right. I was… I'm nervous.

—I can see that. No need to be.

—No, but…

—Look, I know this place is expensive. If you can't pay…— Shadow Weaver began, resigned, thinking that she wanted to impress her or something so she'd take pity on her.

—No! That's not it! I-I genuinely want to give a good impression!— Castaspella exclaimed. —I… love this place so much, and I'd like this to go well…— she then explained, looking away and hunching over.

—Don't tell me you still feel guilty about bumping me with the car…

—Bumping… More like dislocating your shoulder with it— she scoffed, rolling her eyes. —But… Uh, no— Castaspella denied, still looking away. —I know I was wrong for searching for that damned disk while driving… but you did ignore the red light— she smirked.

—Oh, so you're not as regretful and guilty as your message implied— Shadow Weaver pointed out, raising a brow a bit defiantly.

—I was. Not anymore, but… Yeah, I still wanted to compensate you and get to know you better. What I said in the message, I meant all of it.

—And you're still willing to pay for dinner here?

—Pft, I am not— she laughed, rolling her eyes a bit sheepishly. —I called in a favour I've long been owed here.

—Excuse me?

—I know the owner. My family's patronage of this place goes back decades— Castaspella proudly explained. —I was left waiting for my food for a whole hour a few years ago and when the owner learnt about it, she got furious and said I could one day have a free meal here whenever I wanted and with whomever I wanted.

—And you hadn't cashed in that favour yet?

—Nope! I was waiting for, I don't know, being short on money on my birthday, or something…— she admitted, a bit shy.

—Here I was, trying to push your limits and make you regret inviting me for dinner… And turns out I actually made it easier for you?— Shadow Weaver laughed.

—You were!? Oh, this will be a favour well spent— Castaspella giggled. —Alright, we better order the drinks already and check the menu— she finally sighed, waving over the nearest waitress. —What would you want to drink?

—I'd like some red wine. Any recommendations?

—Oh, I think they don't have wine here. But, as a matter of fact, yes, I do have a recommendation — she smiled. —May I?— she then asked, and waited for her to nod. Only then, looking at the waitress, she ordered —Can you get us a menu? And, meanwhile, I'll have a sake tokkuri and please get her a Hundred Hanabi.

—Right away.

—What did you…

—It's a cocktail. I think you'll like it.

—You think?

—It's a hunch.

—As long as it's not some fruity drink…

—As a matter of fact, it's rather spicy!

—Huh…— Shadow Weaver hummed, surprised. —What does it have?

—Three- No, two kinds of alcoholic drinks, jasmine syrup, uh… lemon, and a mix of seven spices.

—You're kidding…

—Nope! Just trust me!

—If I don't like it, you'll have to drink it yourself. First warning— the old woman told her, squinting.

Shortly after, the waitress returned with the menu and the drinks, but Shadow Weaver decided to check what to eat before actually trying the cocktail.

She could see Castaspella expectant.

Well, she'd have to wait.

—I think I'll play it safe and order some tonkotsu ramen.

—Good choice. That's literally the best ramen they have besides the kimchi one— the young woman laughed. —I'll order some sushi cause I want to make the most of this favour— she then said, looking rather… naughty. —Oh, and if there's anything you'd like as entree…

—You were not supposed to enable me like this…— Shadow Weaver sighed. This wasn't as fun… but actually, it wasn't that bad either. —You know what? Alright. Choose whichever you think I'd like. We'll play that game— she finally decided. —And let's see how right your first choice was.

With that, she took a confident sip of her cocktail.

The name was too appropriate.

It literally felt like fireworks in her mouth, but it was such a great feeling too.

—I think that means I was right?— Castaspella asked, with a small smile.

—Curse you. I don't know how, but yes, you were— the old woman admitted. —I can't believe this, but I trust whatever you chose to eat now.

—Wonderful!— she smiled, joining her hands in front of her face. —I won't disappoint!

As Castaspella ordered, the old woman noticed she was slightly more relaxed. Even the pain of her shoulder was rather numb.

Yes, she was enjoying the night.

Interesting…

After the waitress walked away, she admitted —You know? I expected nothing from tonight. You've completely surprised me, and I don't like surprises. So that sake-thing better do its job and get you talking, Esmeralda.

—I thought it was clear from when you first arrived that I do not need help to loosen my tongue— Castaspella laughed. —But I… guess I'm glad. So, yeah, let's talk. Why don't you tell me how you knew about this place?

—Sure— Shadow Weaver nodded, looking away for a second as she decided that, for some reason, she'd be honest. —I have a friend… somehow, and she comes here often with her husband. I knew this place was good, pretty expensive, pretty fancy… And thought it might actually scare you. How wrong I was— she smirked. —Now, I ask: Why is your family so fond of this place?

—Oh, well… I actually don't live that far from here. I'm on foot tonight— she chuckled, right as the entrees arrived. —So, yeah, we've always been pretty frequent clients. It's… basically our thing, if it isn't obvious from my outfit— Castaspella giggled.

—Then you probably saw my friend around at some point. I mean… Angella is pretty easy to notice.

The young woman happened to be taking a sip and almost spat her sake, but forced herself to swallow before giving Shadow Weaver a wide-eyed look.

—Wait, like… Angella Brightmoon!?

—Yes?

—She's my sister-in-law!— Castaspella laughed, almost hysterical.

What!?

—Your brother is Micah of Mystacor!?

—Yes!?

—How did I not know he had a sister!? I was his tutor for twenty years!

—What!? Wait, you're… Oh my gods, you're the Shadow Weaver!? I had no idea!

What the fuck does she mean by "the" Shadow Weaver?

—I… believe I should… eat— the old woman hesitantly said. —I need a moment to think.

—Ye-yeah, of course. Same here— Castaspella nodded, reaching for her chopsticks.

The entrees were soon gone, and the moment of silence extended right until the main dishes arrived.

While the young woman tried to chose which piece of sushi to pick first, Shadow Weaver curiously looked at her ramen, surprised with how much stuff came inside it.

Algae, noodles, a bit of bacon, half an egg, some veggies, even a pair of dumplings!

And why couldn't she stop thinking about it!?

—That bitch never mentioned she knew you— she finally scoffed, in complete disbelief. And then she realized —So that's why she asked if I knew your surname!

They both looked up at the same moment and Castaspella winced.

—Oh, yeah, I did… forget to mention it.

—You think?

Shadow Weaver was still indignant, while the young woman's expression now turned darker.

—Well… had you known I was his sister, would you have accepted the invitation?

—I would have told you to forget anything happened…

—Exactly. My brother is a big name, so I never…— she began, but got interrupted.

—Not because of that— Shadow Weaver scoffed. —I would have told you to forget anything happened because if he finds out, I'm dead— she explained, smirking and shaking her head.

—No, you're not…

—I am— she interrupted again.

It took Castaspella a moment to understand what she meant, but then raised her sake cup and finally said —Then here's hoping he'll learn about all of this when it's already too late…

Raising her cocktail, Shadow Weaver gently tapped it against the tiny cup and let out a small smile.

End Notes

:D Hehe, what did you think!?

I don't know why I came up with this idea in this particular way, but I'm kinda glad lol
Ngl, I've never been at a vehicular incident of that gravity, that I can remember at least, so ofc I focused more on the experiences I could talk about from experience XD

"Does that mean you've ever invited-" No. I have not. My GF lives in a different country. But I didn't need experience on that part, this was supposed to look sloppy af lol

Now! Story time!!!

So, first of all: Nobiru is a real japanese restaurant here in Argentina in Chinatown, and literally my favourite!! (not that expensive tho, which is part of why it's so popular)

Everything I described about it is true, I even used real stuff from the menu lol, and only the part about it not being too crowded is false XD
It is very very crowded ALWAYS

And second: The drinks!!!! I always order a sake tokkuri when I go (basically a little bottle of sake, around 125cc), and only once tried the Hundred Hanabi (actually called 100 Fuegos), because they moved cocktails menu to nighttime only, and I always go for lunch…

If any of you ever visit Argentina, PLEASE do take a stroll around Chinatown and see if you can get a table at Nobiru. I PROMISE it'll be worth it!

That's it for story time!

Finally: If you happen to write Spop fics and would like to jump into this train(wreck) with whichever ship you'd like, don't hesitate to contact Tippen!!!

Many thanks for reading and see you around!!
