Army of Roaches

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/45531865.

Rating:	General Audiences
Archive Warning:	No Archive Warnings Apply
Category:	F/F
Fandom:	She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)
Relationships:	Castaspella/Shadow Weaver | Light Spinner (She-Ra), Castaspella & Shadow Weaver | Light Spinner (She-Ra)
Characters:	Castaspella (She-Ra), Shadow Weaver | Light Spinner (She-Ra)
Additional Tags:	Domestic Fluff, Domestic, issues with a roach, it's mostly funny, I don't know what to write for the tags, and they were ROOMMATES, castaspella is afraid of roaches, so am i lol, can't blame her, Shadow Weaver is so done
Language:	English
Stats:	Published: 2023-03-06 Words: 2,970 Chapters: 1/1

Army of Roaches

by Xenakis (IceRosesCrown)

Summary

After being startled first thing in the morning, Head Sorceress Castaspella finds herself fighting a cockroach in order to recover her room…

Notes

Well, this is gonna sounds super weird but, fr, this happened to me. Like, all you're gonna read. The tweets I put as inspiration for this prove it. Oh, and I think I didn't tweet the little issue with which this ends, but that part also happened…

Anyways, I hope you enjoy and have some fun reading these shenanigans. I wrote five fics using this event, for different fandoms, that is, but you wouldn't imagine the stark difference between the wholesome and soft couples in the other fics, and the messy disaster these two are.

I'll leave links to the other fics in the ending note. (Especially since this fic makes reference to the Catradora and Glimbow versions I wrote)
Now please enjoy!

See the end of the work for more notes

- Inspired by My tweet that inspired this by Diaspro (Xenakis)
- Inspired by Second tweet that inspired this by Diaspro (Xenakis)
- Inspired by Third tweet that inspired this by Diaspro (Xenakis)

It was another morning in the kingdom of Mystacor.

Ugh… It was not a dream.

Shadow Weaver got up from her bed in a terrible mood. She didn't like having to fulfill a lot of silly tasks to make up for the things she did during the war… But alas, she had no say in the matter.

Yet there was nothing she hated more than to have a pair of guards posted outside the room. Except, perhaps, the fact that her room had to be right in front of the Head Sorceress', due to the fact that she was her supervisor.

Just perfect…

She needed her breakfast right that moment, or she would simply jump out of the window. But as soon as she was out of her room, she almost smacked against Castaspella, who was wearing just her nightgown.

That was the last straw.

—What do you think you're doing?— Shadow Weaver hissed. —You can supervise me from a distance— she reproached her, condescending.

—So-sorry, I wasn't- There's a roach in my room! It was on my leg! I didn't see you there!— the sorceress stuttered. —I didn't mean to run into you, woman!

—A roach? And here I thought you were a clean person…— she mocked her.

—Oh, shut up!

—If you're so afraid of it that you fled your room, I can always use what little power I have left to blast it away— Shadow Weaver offered, with a patronizing tone again. —We wouldn't want the Head Sorceress to be seen screaming like a toddler at a little bug…

—What!? No! Cut that! And no, because it's on my bed! You can't blast it!

—Fine— she let out, rolling her eyes. —I'll get some poison from my plants, it should kill the cockroach in a few hours…

—I…— Castaspella began, stunned, and interrupted herself to clear her throat. —That would be perfect. Much appreciated.

She carefully returned to her room to quickly grab her clothes and ran out again without losing a second.

Meanwhile, the woman retrieved a vial from her room, containing a distillate that would evaporate in contact with air, and threw it into the Head Sorceress' room. She then closed the door and leant on it, smirking. She had managed to take a quick look at the place and something called her attention.

—So… You can't even get close to a single cockroach but you keep three terrariums full of spiders!?

—You- Oh, please. You have no idea what you're talking about— Castaspella retorted. —Spiders are respectful, diplomatic. Roaches are… treacherous.

The sorceress gestured with her hands dramatically when she said the last word, squinting and changing her tone. It reminded Shadow Weaver of the way she'd tell stories so histrionically it took her forever to get to the point.

—I don't know if you're serious or just trying to call me "roach"— the woman uttered, folding her arms.

Even with the mask, it was obvious she was raising a brow, questioningly, yet appeared far from offended.

With all seriousness, Castaspella replied —No, well… I'd say you're a spider that behaves like a roach.

—A what!?

—You can be diplomatic and respectful when you so see fit, but you've been treacherous on many occasions too— the sorceress explained, casually, as if it were a normal thing to say.

It left Shadow Weaver speechless.

How not? Even the guards behind them were just as shocked, but had to pretend they weren't even there.

The woman forgot all about it as the day went by, solely focused on being done with her chores as fast as possible. Hence, when she arrived at her room that night and found the Head Sorceress almost asleep, resting against the door of her own room, she had no idea what was going on.

Shadow Weaver gave the guards a questioning look, but they completely ignored her, so she walked towards the sorceress and woke her up. Only then did she remember…

Right.

Her room had been filled with poison…

But still.

—What are you doing!?

—Uh? What?

—Why are you sleeping on your door? Your room isn't toxic anymore after so many hours— Shadow Weaver assured her.

—Eh? No, no, it's not… that— Castaspella began, shaking the drowsiness. She stood up clumsily, and explained —I can't find the roach. So what if it's still alive? Maybe I'll wake up and it will be on my bed again! And…

—Stop. You're rambling— Shadow Weaver interrupted her, raising a hand. —If it's so much trouble for you, why don't you just sleep in my room? I understand you have to stay where you can supervise me, no?

—No, no. I-I couldn't…

—Alright— the woman easily agreed. —But you handle your back pain alone tomorrow— she warned her, and walked towards the door of her room, smirking under the mask in anticipation.

—Fine— the Head Sorceress let out, her tone resigned.

The women completely ignored the guards' stunned expressions as they entered the room, and closed the door without saying a word.

—Alright. Make yourself comfortable— Shadow Weaver said, disinterested.

—I- Thanks— the sorceress said, sitting down on the couch. —I guess I'll sleep here.

The woman was about to nod but, when she turned to look at Castaspella, she immediately retorted —Don't be ridiculous. The point is that you do not sleep sitting. Go to the bed.

—Stars! Alright!— she replied, raising her hands as if giving up. —How bossy— she muttered, sitting down on the bed. At that moment, she realized she would have to sleep in her current clothes because she didn't have her nightgown, and lay down with an exhausted sigh. Right after, Shadow Weaver settled down on the other side of the bed, maskless now, and looked back at Castaspella, smirking. —I really should just… sleep on the couch— she stammered, uncomfortable.

—Drop that. The bed is big enough, woman. Just go to sleep. It's not like I will do anything to you— she replied, giving her a reproaching look. —Unless you're disgusted by my face. That's it, right? Regardless, I was planning on sleeping looking away…

—It's not that— the sorceress quickly denied. —There's no problem with your face… Who's being ridiculous now?

—I don't believe it— Shadow Weaver retorted, scoffing. —You don't have to pretend niceness with me. I find it to be in poor taste.

—I am not- Ugh, forget it— Castaspella grunted.

That was the longest night ever for Shadow Weaver. She was used to her insomnia, but this time it was… something else.

And the morning began exactly as she expected.

The woman had managed to fall asleep for almost an hour before the sun rose, yet was shaken awake by a very startled Castaspella. When she opened her eyes, they were just a palm away from each other, almost as if cuddling.

Again.

—So much for having no issue with my face— Shadow Weaver mocked her.

—It's not…

—I know. I am messing with you, fool— she interrupted.

—What did you do!?— the sorceress asked, ignoring the insult.

—I did nothing…

—Then why…

—I kept waking up with you up close like this, and several times I had to push you away because I knew you would react like this— Shadow Weaver explained. —It was a question of time until you woke up before I did.

—There's no way I…

—Yes, there is. You move too much in your sleep— she assured her. —Now I believe we both have full days ahead— she concluded, getting up and walking towards the bathroom to wash her face.

In fact, that day was quite an interesting one. The little times Shadow Weaver had free enough to walk around freely through Mystacor, she had surprised Castaspella in the middle of some investigation and experimentation with spells.

At first, she paid it no attention; perhaps mocked her a bit, but she had more pressing matters to attend to, and would promptly leave to complete her list of tasks for the day as soon as she could.

However, when she was done that afternoon, she came across the same situation as earlier, and decided to take a closer look.

—This… No, no— Castaspella muttered to herself. —It's not this either…

—What are you supposed to be doing?

—You again? Didn't I tell you to leave me alone?

—Yes. And I told you to stop playing with those spells, yet here we are— Shadow Weaver reproached her. —These are no joke, you know?

—I know— the sorceress disdainfully retorted. —I am trying to craft a spell based on them.

—You mean a spell that will allow you to get rid of roaches? Is that your brilliant plan?

—Ma-maybe?

—Fun as it sounds… I have to tell you it would be difficult to control which of the nearest roaches is supposed to be obliterated— the woman began, hands joined behind her back as she assumed her tutor-like demeanor. —Even if it were to take out all the roaches the spell can reach, it would still be quite complicated to control overall, and the area of effect may as well be as large as Etheria itself.

—Maybe it's better to just eliminate all cockroaches on the planet— Castaspella joked. —After all, from what Glimmer told me, there have been issues with those bugs at Bright Moon, you know? So… perhaps, it wouldn't be that bad…

—A spell so huge to do so would only achieve its purpose if it has enough power— Shadow Weaver interrupted, mocking her. —To eliminate all roaches in Etheria would take unfathomable amounts of power.

—Power? Really?— the sorceress asked, taunting. —So you surely know how to achieve that…

—As a matter of fact, I do— she countered, smirking. —If you want to be a hypocrite and try it yourself, I can always guide you through the spell…

—Stars, no— Castaspella immediately replied. She let out a long sigh and dropped all the papers she was reading. —I suppose I'll stick to the simple spell to get rid of a bug I can see…

—Then why did you want this spell to begin with?

—Because I still can't find the cursed roach!

—I see… And I suppose that, as you hated sharing the room with me so much, you'd rather search for it all night?— Shadow Weaver said, condescending.

—I didn't- I didn't hate that— the sorceress quickly answered, looking away with a faint blush. —It's just that… I hate being a burden, alright?— she admitted. —And it is one thing to have you under permanent vigilance, and another to literally invade your space!

—So it's that…— the woman sighed. —Alright, come— she ordered, directly heading for Castaspella's room. When they arrived, Shadow Weaver went in for just a moment, apparently found and disposed of the bug, and promptly walked out. —There it is, you fool…

—Thank you— the sorceress angrily uttered.

Now she could sleep in her own room.

After a tranquil night, Castaspella woke up feeling refreshed. The day passed without a hitch, and it was dinnertime when she saw Shadow Weaver return from her duties of the day. She looked so drained that the sorceress invited her to have dinner with her, and argued it was her way of thanking her for the assistance with the roach.

—So now you have recovered your room, right?

—I have. Or, well, you recovered it for me— Castaspella pointed out, ashamed.

—Ah, but it means that, unbeknownst to you, the other roaches are planning their revenge as we speak— she mocked her.

The sorceress felt herself tense with nervousness but hid it as she retorted —That would mean the roaches are, in fact, quite like you. Or rather, that you and your petty acts of revenge are roach behaviour.

—You can't be serious.

—I am. See? I was right!— Castaspella kept mocking her.

—Why did I have to agree to eat with you…— Shadow Weaver lamented.

They retired to their corresponding rooms soon after, and got ready to sleep. Yet it had been perhaps an hour or so when a scratching sound awakened the sorceress. She was used to her spiders making noises inside their terrariums, but this one sounded completely different.

Disconcerted, Castaspella sat up on her bed and waited for the noise, wanting to see what was making it. After a while, she heard it again, and it definitely wasn't her spiders.

There was only one explanation…

All her drowsiness vanished as she ran out of her room and barged into Shadow Weaver's, exclaiming —You seriously are a roach!

Outside, the guards exchanged a surprised look as they had absolutely no context and couldn't understand what was going on.

It confused them even more to hear the woman simply reply —I take it there are more cockroaches in your room.

—There are!

Of course. Just her luck…

With a sigh, Shadow Weaver got up, put on her mask, and walked across the corridor into Castaspella's room, carrying a vial of poison. They waited for a moment, a long moment, expecting the scratching sound the sorceress insisted she had heard, but there was nothing.

—That's it. I'll go back to sleep. You should too— the woman sentenced, giving up.

—No, no, wait!

Right as Shadow Weaver took a step, the scratching noise sounded again, and she saw the sorceress look around in distress.

—Alright… Just take whatever you need and leave. I'll handle this— the woman ordered. A moment after, she left the room, sighing —That should deal with them…

—Thank you— the sorceress shyly uttered, holding her clothes against her chest and looking away.

—What are you doing in the middle of the corridor? I meant go to the room— Shadow Weaver clarified.

—I told you, I don't want to be a burden— she insisted.

But the woman had enough for that night.

Pulling her by the arm, she dragged her into the room, saying —Stop being a baby…

As they settled on the bed, Shadow Weaver stared at the window, through which she could see it was raining, and couldn't help but wonder how that was possible.

—I didn't remember it rained here… In fact, I don't understand how this can be if we're above the clouds.

—Oh, that's actually pretty simple— Castaspella quickly replied. —It is actually raining under the island right now. However, we are inside the cloud. What you see is condensed water, not quite like rain. A part falls here, and another falls under us— she explained.

So that was it…

Shadow Weaver would never say it, but she found that display of knowledge quite appealing. Especially with how patiently and clearly she explained it all.

But enough of that nonsense.

What did it matter to her if it was appealing, right?

—Interesting— she simply said.

—Well, now I suppose it's time to sleep…

—Indeed— Shadow Weaver agreed.

—Good thing this time I won't be startled if I wake up close to you like last time— Castaspella pointed out, giggling.

—Is that so?— the woman asked, smirking. —We'll see…

And she did, in fact, test that.

During the night, once again, Shadow Weaver woke up finding Castaspella snuggling up against her. This time, however, she didn't push her away; simply went back to sleep telling herself this was just a test, not something she'd normally allow.

So morning arrived, the sun shone through the window, and the Head Sorceress slowly opened her eyes.

She hummed, letting out a small smile, as she realized how warm and comfortable she felt. For a while, she simply observed the woman sleep, until she awoke too.

Shadow Weaver's expression was a sight to behold.

Castaspella couldn't help but laugh at her surprise; the woman was in utter shock, and instead, it was her who backed away, startled.

—You are delusional!

—You're behaving like a baby!

Castaspella ran after Shadow Weaver through the corridors of Mystacor. The woman's fear was quite surprising per se, but the sorceress chasing after her was what left plenty of acolytes speechless.

—Get off me!

—I just want to thank you!

—Stay away from me with your sappy foolery!— Shadow Weaver yelled when Castaspella finally caught her.

She tried to keep her at arm's length, yet the Head Sorceress was fast enough and managed to smooch her mask.

—There!

—Ugh! I need disinfectant…

—Oh, shut up!— Castaspella laughed.

It was a weird day. Having made such a scandal in the middle of a corridor, rumors quickly spread around, along with several stories trying to explain what had happened between the Head Sorceress and Shadow Weaver. Some were hilarious, others implied some sort of charming spell, and others took it more seriously and proposed some kind of intricate plan from Shadow Weaver was behind that.

But none of those stories were right.

Only the guards, who had seen and heard everything that happened, could guess the truth. Or at least, part of what happened. The rest was all speculation.

Yet their mishaps wouldn't end there…

Around midday, Shadow Weaver was walking down the hall and past her room when a loud noise came from Castaspella's room. The woman stopped in her tracks and glanced at the door before turning to question the guards.

—The-the Head Sorceress is cleaning— one of them said.

—Cleaning? Does it sound like cleaning? Or like something heavy fell off?— Shadow Weaver reproached them. —Forget it. I'll see myself.

From inside the room, Castaspella saw when the door opened and her face immediately contorted into a pleading expression.

—I…

—Damn it— Shadow Weaver cursed.

Her sight went from the chunk of ceiling scattered across the floor to the contrite sorceress standing in the middle of the room. Cursing again, the woman turned around and waved her hand, signaling for Castaspella to follow her.

She was so done…

End Notes

Yes. A piece of my ceiling fell down.
Also, if they had a pet (not counting Casta's spiders) I would have written it doing the same my cat did irl.

Now, I hope you had fun and, in case you wanna read the other versions of this, if you like the other fandoms, here are the links:

Honkai Impact 3rd: Duranrita version
Genshin Impact: Jeanlisa version
She-Ra (2018): Catradora version, Glimbow version

Thank you all for reading!!

Please drop by the Archive and comment to let the creator know if you enjoyed their work!