Roll with It: Mystacor Edition

by Xenakis (IceRosesCrown)

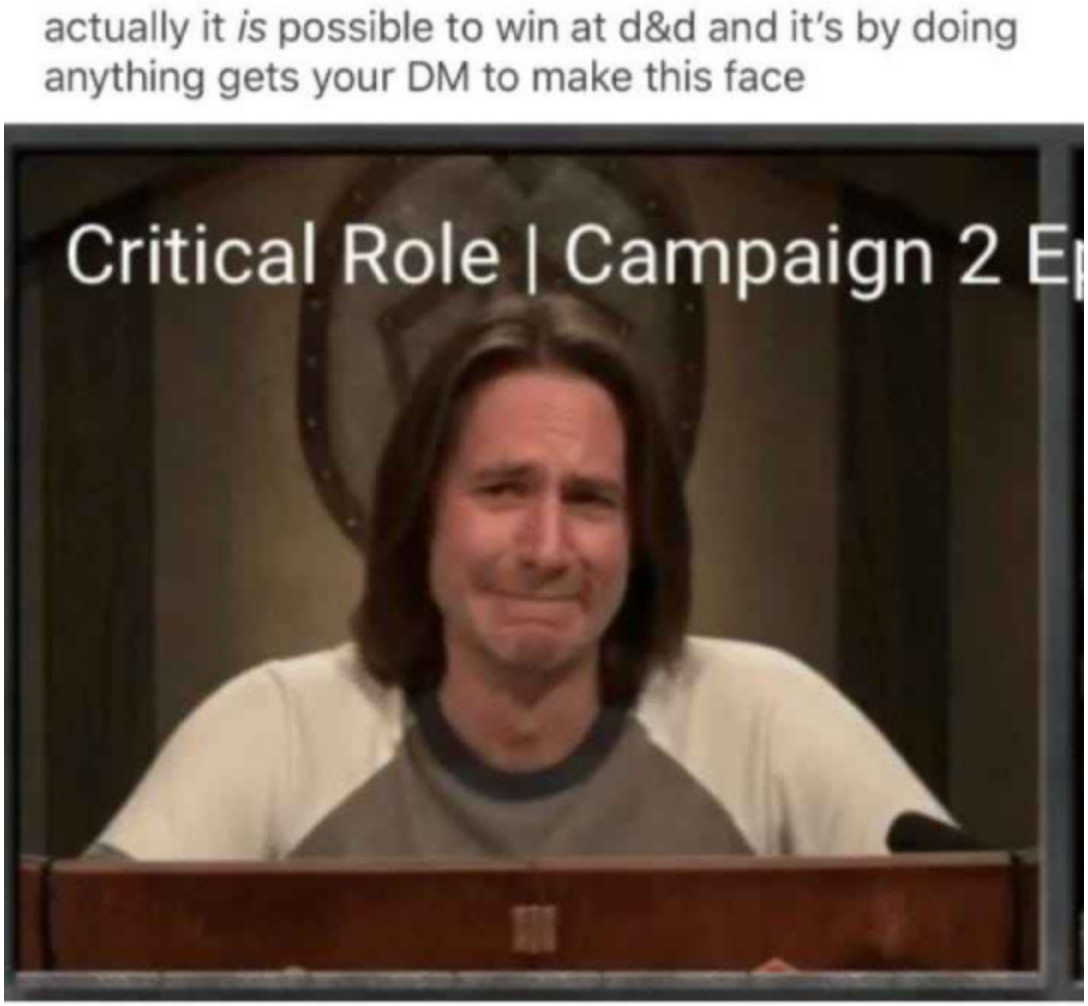

Summary

Sometimes, when the moons align and everything falls into place, the four most prominent magicians of Mystacor manage the impossible: sit together to play a session of Dungeons and Dragons!

In this occasion, Norwyn has prepared a one-shot to die for.

How will our three players navigate the setting he has come up with!?
Will they survive?
And what's more important: Will anyone make Norwyn do this? (see reference meme)

why?

Notes

Welcome everyone!
This silly one-shot is based on a campaign me and my irl friends played one night long ago XD

Many details have been lost to time, so I had to improvise a few things BUT I can tell you this: the base is the same, the “this is insane!” moments are the same, and only a few inconsequential details have been changed/adapted to fill the memory gaps lol

In any case, I hope you find it entertaining, and/or hilarious! Most of all, I hope you enjoy!

P.s.: Since not everyone has read my other stuff <(“^_^) I tend to use the 80s canon “real” names for Casta and LS/SW, which are “Esmeralda” for Casta, and “Beatrix” for Light Spinner. It's important to know that for this fic (kind of)

See the end of the work for more notes

It was late at night in Mystacor. A chilly wind blew through the halls, and all lights were off…

Except in one chamber.

Inside this room, the air was warm, the lights illuminated the place, and a pair of tables had been set; one with food and drinks, the other with paper sheets and dice of all sizes, colors, and number of sides…

Norwyn sat at the head of the table, fine-tuning a few aspects of his one-shot campaign for the night, while his three players stood around the other table, eating a bit until everything was ready to begin.

—So… why so much mystery, Light Spinner?— Micah asked, before getting a bunch of potato fries into his mouth.

—As I said many times already, I just want my character to be a surprise— she replied, pouring herself some coffee, her voice tone conveying her smirk.

—I'm so sure your "surprise" will be far from pleasant…— Castaspella commented, rolling her eyes. —I think I'll need this— she then added, reaching for the bottle of sake.

—Probably… You said you will be playing as me, didn't you?

—Indeed… You'll get to see how the rest of the world sees you— she rebuked, smug.

—Well, I would tell you to change the sake for some wine, but these bottles are terrible…

—Why didn't you bring your own?

—Because someone said he would handle it— Light Spinner replied, disgusted.

—Right…— Castaspella uttered, rolling her eyes.

—What do you have against my wine, Light Spinner!?— Norwyn immediately asked, indignant. —It's the finest I had!

—Meaning you clearly wouldn't recognize good wine if it slapped you across the face— she mocked him.

—Alright! Enough with the wine argument— Micah interrupted. —If you don't like it, you have your… very strong coffee.

—It's not that strong— his sister scoffed, dismissive.

—This kind of coffee is actually known for its concentration— the old woman corrected her. —I'd say your tolerance to it is as high as mine…

—Wow. Actual praise from you!?

—Take it as you want— she brushed her off, looking away.

—Well… If everyone has their drink, you may come to the table so we start this campaign— Norwyn invited them, forgetting about the insult to his knowledge of wine. The three promptly joined him at the game table and sat; Micah in front of him, Castaspella to his right, and Light Spinner to his left, in front of the young sorceress. —Everyone ready?

—Of course— Micah nodded.

—Very well— he sighed. —The three of you walk into a magnificent chamber, the main hall of the Magic School you have just been accepted into. Today is the welcome ceremony for all new alumni, so the Headmaster begins his speech. "Welcome everyone to a new year in our prestigious school! It is my great honor to receive our freshmen today, and lead their familiar attunement ceremony!" he enthusiastically begins. "But first, we shall give each of you a moment to introduce yourselves. Don't be shy, step forward" he encouragingly says, gesturing at you all.

Norwyn fell silent and, keeping himself in-character, gestured at the others to speak up.

—I figure I should start— Castaspella decided, right as Light Spinner opened her mouth. —It's what you were going to do, right?

—As a matter of fact, my character will go last…

—Good then— she smirked. —So, I step forward, standing very straight, chin up, and clear my throat. "I'll go first. My name is Beatrix, and I've come from very far away to enroll in this school, since only its exemplary reputation is befitting of someone of my talent."

—How quaint…— Light Spinner immediately uttered.

—Was that in-character?— Norwyn asked, raising a brow.

—No— she chuckled. —Quite far from talking yet. My character is silently standing at the back, pretending she's invisible for as long as possible.

—Alright— he nodded.

—Erm, are we going to use miniatures for this?— Micah then inquired, with an expression that suggested he hoped for an affirmative reply.

—I suppose we can cast some miniature illusions?— his sister proposed.

—Sure— Norwyn agreed.

Castaspella immediately created her little character with a spell: a tall elf woman, with long black hair, face half-covered by a veil… Exactly what you'd expect a character based on Light Spinner to look like. Only the robes differed.

—Aww, it's an adorable version of…

—Don’t you dare— the old woman interrupted Micah.

—Oh, trust me, Brother. She’ll be far from adorable the more you know her…

The sorceresses silently exchanged mocking grimaces for a moment before Norwyn decided to continue.

—Alright! Who’s next?

—She said she’s going last, so I’ll go— Micah replied. —Erm… Well, I step forward, brush back my blonde hair, and stand guard. “Thank you for the welcome, Headmaster. I’m Mike, and I’m honored to have been accepted into this school. I hope to learn to control my new powers.”

Right after, and as the three were giving him questioning looks since he mentioned “blonde hair”, he immediately cast his miniature illusion.

—Is that… She-Ra?— Castaspella noticed.

—No! It’s my barbarian!

—Who looks suspiciously like She-Ra…— Light Spinner insisted, sardonic.

—Oh, come on!

—Alright, alright. If he wants to be a tall, blonde barbarian, named “Mike”, let him— Norwyn interceded.

—Very creative, Brother— the young woman giggled.

—Glad you’re having fun, Sis…— he muttered, blushing.

—Shall we continue?

—Yes, Norwyn— the siblings nodded.

—I believe it’s your turn, Light Spinner. Reveal your character to them, will you? And don’t say I didn’t warn you…

—Warning acknowledged— she laughed. —So… I awkwardly step forward, looking all around without making eye contact with anyone, and take a deep breath to calm down. “I, um… Hi. I’m still trying to adjust to the fact that I was accepted here, so I’m a bit nervous, sorry. A-and I’m not sure what to say… I guess I’ll do my best. Oh! Right… I almost forgot, sorry. My name is Esmeralda.”— she concluded, her sight falling on the sorceress in front of her as she smirked.

—Bitch!— Castaspella immediately yelled. —Out of character— she quickly clarified, briefly looking at Norwyn. —But, I can’t believe you stole my idea!

—I had it first. I would accuse you of stealing it, but I believe it was a mere coincidence— Light Spinner pointed out, a bit too calm.

—And why make me look so awkward!?

—You have no idea how you look in new situations, do you?— she laughed.

—Am I that anxious!?

—Only until you meet some people— Micah assured her, scratching his neck.

The young woman covered her face with her hands and muffled a groan, while a miniature of "Esmeralda" appeared on the table with the other two.

—Aww, that little you is quite cute, Sis.

—What?— she immediately asked, removing her hands. Curious, she inspected the illusion for a moment before questioning —You're not making a ridiculous or ugly version of me?

—Why would I? You didn't…

—That's… unexpectedly nice of you. Are you alright?— she insisted, suspicious.

—If you want me to turn you into some hideous hag, I most certainly can…

—No! No- Sorry…

—I certainly nailed the unnecessary apologies— Light Spinner laughed, leaving the illusion as is: a tall human woman, black hair tied up in a bun, and wearing blue robes.

—Very well. Now that you three have introduced yourselves, other students do the same until everyone has— Norwyn calmly decided to continue. —Which means it is now time for the familiar attunement ceremony!

—What's that?— Micah immediately asked.

—In simple terms, I'll ask you three to roll a d-twenty each; in-game, your characters will perform an invocation that will result in your familiar, and this familiar will give you a set of bonuses for your character classes.

—Then let us start!— Castaspella exclaimed, excited. —Again, I'll go first— she smugly declared. With absolute confidence, she picked up a twenty-sided die, then shook it between her hands while explaining —So, Beatrix will focus just enough, extend her hands, and summon her familiar with absolute trust in her abilities.

Then it was time for the roll… and she got an eight.

—Ugh…— Micah flinched.

The sorceress stared wide-eyed at the number, and felt a chill.

—Modifiers!?— she stammered, almost like a plea.

—None.

—"Ugh", indeed— Light Spinner scoffed, sardonic.

This wouldn't be too useful…

—After a moment of concentrating, it seems like nothing happens, until a flash of light materializes your familiar in front of you. A toad— Norwyn narrated.

—What!?— Castaspella reacted. How to play a character based on Light Spinner if… No, no. There was still a way. Ignoring the old woman's laughter, she took a second to really think, get into her character, and cleared her throat. —A-alright. So, Beatrix refuses to receive it and shakes her head. "No, no. There must have been a mistake! This can't possibly be my familiar!"

—"No mistake, Miss Beatrix. This is the familiar you've summoned"— Norwyn replied, in-character.

Dramatically, Castaspella squinted at him as "Beatrix" would at the Headmaster, and then concluded —Then she reluctantly accepts it before stalking away.

—"Good. Who's next?"

—"Me! Me!"— Micah excitedly exclaimed. —So, Mike focuses really hard, extends a hand, and…— he began, before picking up a twenty-sided die. He closed his eyes while rolling it, and opened them when he heard a gasp. —Yes!

He had rolled a nineteen.

—Mike. From your extended hand, a few flames burst before a mighty bird appears. A phoenix— Norwyn told him.

—Oh, what!?

—Yes!— Micah celebrated for a second before apologetically looking at Castaspella. —Sorry, Sis.

—You shouldn't apologize for being talented, Micah.

—Why don't you shut up already!?— the young sorceress seethed, looking like she wanted nothing more than to jump on her. —Let's see what you get…

Norwyn hesitated momentarily, looking between the women, before eventually asking —Are we sure we can go on? Do you two need to talk or something?

—We're fine— Castaspella insisted.

—Let's continue— Light Spinner nodded, after Norwyn looked at her for confirmation.

He cleared his throat, a bit unsure, but finally went on —Erm… "Esmeralda. Your turn".

—Let's see…— she sighed, deciding whether she should, perhaps, be a bit less mean than she wanted. —I focus really hard too, look serious, and stretch out both hands, muttering "Please work. Please work…"

She made a gesture to magically roll her twenty-sided die, but Norwyn caught her right before she could.

—We said we're only rolling the dice manually to avoid any suspicion of cheating…— he reminded her.

—Right— she had to accept, between gritted teeth. Now she just wanted to get it over with, so she swiftly picked it up, rolled it, and told him —Thirteen. What do I get?

—Ahem. Between your hands, a soft light appears and from it emerges… uh… a medium-sized spider.

—Fitting— the woman chuckled.

—So… What do our familiars do?— Micah asked.

—Now that you all have them, I can tell you— Norwyn nodded. —So, um, for Beatrix, we have the toad, right?

—Yes…

—That gives you a plus three in wisdom.

—Whatever the fuck is that useful for!?

—It might be, Sis. Your character's a wizard, after all… Wisdom saves can be important…

—I already have plus two in wisdom! A-and he said Intelligence is the priority! So why isn't the familiar bonus for intelligence!?

—You know I'm the first one to question this old ram, but I think it's only logical, if your roll was bad, to get an equally bad bonus— Light Spinner pointed out.

—Of course you would finally agree with him when it comes to- Ugh!— Castaspella finally exploded. Short from slamming her hands on the table, she stood up and said —I'll pour myself more sake, you can continue…

—Are you sure?

—Yes!

Micah flinched a bit but knew it was better to go on before she got even angrier, so he gave Norwyn a pleading look.

—Erm… Right. Mike, your phoenix, which is a rare familiar, gives you… plus two in death saving rolls.

—Noted.

—And Esmeralda's spider gives you… advantage in perception checks— he then told Light Spinner. —Now! I shall go to the restroom for a moment— he announced, giving Micah a meaningful look.

—Oh, if we're taking a break, I need to go to the bathroom too…

As the sorcerers stood up, only the old woman remained on the table, and Norwyn lowered his tone to exhort her —Talk to Casta.

—But…

—You heard me. I don't care what happened, talk this out…

—And if she doesn't want to talk?

—That's why I'm telling you to do it. Since when do you let that stop you?— he remarked.

—Fine. But I can't make promises…

—Good enough— he accepted, and finally walked away.

Both sorcerers left the room, each went in a different direction, and shortly after returned. However, before reentering the room, they both hesitated.

—Did something happen with Casta that I don't know?

—I'm unaware of anything other than what you know, Micah. It would seem, however, that she has a lot she needs to let out…

—But why isn't she talking to me?

—Sometimes… we can't talk to the people closest to us, because they are the closest and we fear losing them— Norwyn gently told him, placing a hand on his shoulder. —Come on now. We better make sure they are both still in one piece— he then laughed.

Fortunately, they were.

In fact, whatever talk they had seemed to have been exactly what Castaspella needed.

It was evident in her face.

All the rage was gone, she looked calmer, and her expression had notoriously softened.

—Are we ready to continue?— she asked with a warm smile.

—We are if you are.

—Absolutely!

—Very well, then— Norwyn accepted, nodding appreciatively yet discreetly at Light Spinner. —As the ceremony of familiar attunement draws to a close, you are ushered along with all the freshmen to your first class, which takes place at a gymnasium already prepared with practice dummies.

—Oh, we're practicing already!?

—Perhaps…

—Alright, if everyone prefers to run blindly around, suit yourself. I will roll perception— the old sorceress sentenced. —So, I have advantage, meaning I get to roll twice… Plus two… I got an eighteen— she told Norwyn, after rolling her die.

—Very well. So, Esmeralda is paying attention to her surroundings, meaning she notices a few things: First, the group of freshmen among which you're walking is far larger than the groups of students from superior years. Second, the practice dummies look new, as if they have had little use. And third, there doesn't seem to be any professors in sight. Only some familiar whom the group started to follow in there; a lizard— he narrated.

—Hmm…— she hummed, pensive. —Can I figure out whose familiar it is?

—You can use your time in the gymnasium to investigate that, yes— he nodded.

—Perfect.

—But then, let me first see what the others are doing— Norwyn interrupted. He gave the siblings a questioning look and asked —Are you going to join the practice?

Castaspella cleared her throat and got a bit into character to reply —I don't need any practice. So I'll just sit and watch the rest. Someone must be competent enough to prove a good ally.

—Why would you need an ally?

—Micah, don't you remember what's the setting?

—A magic school?

—No- Never mind. We'll let you find out— she decided, unamused. —In any case, what is Mike doing?

—Oh, I'll practice, yes! I want to test this phoenix!

—Good, because Beatrix is interested in what it can do— Castaspella chuckled.

—I would be, I'll give you that— Light Spinner admitted, squinting at her albeit with a smirk.

—Very well. Let me first handle them, and then we'll see where your investigation takes Esmeralda. Yes?

—Sure…— she nonchalantly accepted.

—Good— he smiled. —So, Micah, what will Mike try to do?

—Erm… So, barbarian moves that the phoenix can do…— the sorcerer hesitated, thinking aloud.

—Your familiars fight in your stead, the barbarian is your familiar. It will take a humanoid form to fight— Norwyn explained.

—That's amazing!

—He really forgot everything I explained pre-campaign, didn't he?— Norwyn uttered, looking at Castaspella.

—Yes…

—Regardless… Just, what will your phoenix do? What does Mike command it to do?

—We're level one, right?

—Yes…

—And I only get two rages per long-rest.

—Precisely.

—Can I command the phoenix to produce an axe and hit the dummy?

—Sure… Do you carry an axe?

—Of course.

—Good, then, your familiar being attuned to you will take humanoid form, produce a greataxe, and swing it at the dummy— Norwyn narrated. —Roll to hit.

—Alright. Got a ten. But I have proficiency with greataxe, which is that one, so it's twelve. Am I missing something?

—The armour class of the dummies is just one, don't worry about that. Roll damage.

—Let's see… Oh yes! Twelve!

The other three stared at Micah as he celebrated getting the maximum damage with his weapon… on a simple dummy.

—Right, so… Mike. Your phoenix swigs its axe at the dummy and now… it's gone.

Immediately, Castaspella and Light Spinner exchanged a glance.

It was evident what that meant…

—Alright, I'll stand up and go to introduce myself.

—Sure— Norwyn accepted.

The sorceress cleared her throat and got into character, gathering all the confidence she could to act like Light Spinner.

—"Congratulations, young… uh, man… That was a most impressive display of power."

—"Oh, thank you. I'm Mike. You are… Beatrix, right? You mentioned coming from far away."

—"Indeed"— she nodded, acting solemn and serious.

—"Then why didn't you go somewhere closer?"

—"I'm sure you're aware of the reputation of this most prestigious institution…"

—"No, I just got an invitation"— he smiled.

Castaspella facepalmed immediately and chuckled before asking Norwyn —Do our characters know the truth?

—Not yet. But characters like yours, who "know" the school, are aware that there's a kind of testing you'll need allies for…

—Perfect. You'll have to wait, Brother— she laughed. —So, um… I'll attempt to invite Mike to join me, but I can't really say why…— she let out, pensive. —"An invitation, you say? You must be a very talented and powerful magician, then."

—Am I really talking about power every five minutes?

—Yes…

—Absolutely…

—Around new people? Sure.

The three spoke at the same time, without a hint of hesitation, which made Light Spinner roll her eyes.

—I haven't once mentioned it tonight!

—Like you haven't been almost drooling at Mike's display of prowess, no? Don't think the shine in your eyes with the summoning before and that hit just now went unnoticed— Castaspella called her out. —As I said, around new people, you do it quite a lot. Which would explain why you haven't mentioned it tonight. I'd say you tend to keep such comments to yourself once you've made sure those around you know exactly how you feel.

The old woman looked away, folded her arms, and begrudgingly admitted —Perhaps…

—Shall we go back to the game?— Norwyn asked, obviously annoyed at the derailment.

After all, this was not the kind of fun campaign-derailment he could accept…

—Right, of course. Apologies— the young sorceress agreed, contrite. —So, where was I? Ah, yes… "Mike, you must be quite talented to have been invited. And that attack just now… What an admirable familiar you've summoned."

—"Thank you! I wasn't expecting to blow away the dummy, but perhaps I was just lucky."

—"It seems to me you're unaware of your great potential. Why don't you team up with me, Mike? There will be a test of sorts for us, freshmen, and quite soon, from what I know. What do you think?" And then I offer him my hand to shake— Castaspella concluded, stretching her hand at her brother.

—"Works for me!"— Micah gleefully agreed, shaking her hand.

Light Spinner couldn't help rolling her eyes, yet smirked behind the veil.

—Alright, then. It's now time to see what Esmeralda discovers— Norwyn stated. —What will you do to investigate?

—Roll investigation?

—I mean, what does your character do?

—Right. I'll approach the familiar, or follow it if it's moving.

—Will you interact?

—No, just observe— Light Spinner clarified. —Do I roll now?— she then asked, picking up the twenty-sided die. As he nodded, she rolled and got a sixteen. —This is nineteen with the modifier.

—Good— he nodded. —Following the familiar, you ignore the freshmen who are practicing, but notice that the lizard is paying close attention. It even seems to be judging them. You deduce that, probably, the owner of the familiar might be seeing through it— he began. —But that's not all. There's something about this lizard that seems off. Having seen the phoenix that Mike got, you'd think that powerful familiars are more imposing and wonderful the more powerful they are. Yet this small lizard emanates notorious power, you can perceive it, and it's a bit too much for what looks like an ordinary familiar.

—Can I roll arcana to figure out what kind of power it is?

—That's something my character would do— Castaspella pointed out, arms folded and brow raised.

—Aren't you curious?— she rebuked, almost reproaching. —I didn't say Esmeralda wants that power, just that she's interested in figuring out what it is, which I believe you would be.

—Fair.

—Roll arcana, then.

—That's a plus three again…— she muttered, rolling and getting a fourteen. —Seventeen. Ah, but I have proficiency, meaning it's nineteen too.

—Seventeen was already good enough—he chuckled. —Well then, you have no doubts. The power is draconic.

—The owner of the familiar has draconic power!?— Light Spinner exclaimed.

—That's your guess…

—Norwyn, you either mean an elf with draconic heritage or a damned dragon. There aren't that many possibilities.

—But that's meta-gaming— Castaspella reminded her.

—Right.

—Do you wish to investigate any further?— he finally asked her.

—I suppose that's enough. And I'd say this discovery makes Esmeralda pretty anxious, so she'll probably appear quite restless to everyone else— she replied, her sight setting on the young sorceress at the end.

—Do you want me to notice that?

—Maybe?

—Do I?

—What's your passive perception?— Norwyn sighed.

—Fifteen? Wait, as an elf I have proficiency in perception too, so seventeen, actually.

—You notice. But if you mean to talk to her, it will have to wait, because right now, a voice that is magically broadcasted through the school calls you all to have lunch— he explained.

—Alright.

—On that note, I'll grab some snacks too— Light Spinner commented, standing up.

—Is there some left-over coffee? I would like some— Castaspella promptly asked her.

—There is.

As the young sorceress also headed for the other table to pour herself a mug, Micah remained with Norwyn.

—This is fun!

—I'm glad you're liking the campaign…

—Will there be more fighting?

—Most certainly— he nodded with a suspicious smirk.

—What did I forget about this campaign?

—I would tell you, but I agree with them— Norwyn laughed. —We should let you find out when it comes up.

—Fine…— he grunted. —What comes after the lunch, though? I suppose we're going through it pretty quickly.

—You can choose to skip taking any action during lunch, yes. As for what comes next… I suppose if you're so eager to fight, I can have you do some duel practice class— he replied, thoughtful.

—Oh, that would be interesting!— Castaspella commented, returning to the table, followed by Light Spinner.

—We'll get to fight this time— the old sorceress told her.

—Will you just let lunch pass and take no action, then?

—As a matter of fact, I will do something— Castaspella decided. —Beatrix will, uh, sit with Mike and tell him they must be ready for the test they will face.

—You want to discuss strategy?— Micah asked.

—Precisely— she nodded.

—Alright. What do you tell him?

—Have we reached the dining room yet?— she first inquired. As he nodded, she began —"Mike. Come with me. We have a lot to discuss."

—"Sure. Wha-what about?"

—"How we'll collaborate to pass the test I mentioned, of course. I believe I have quite an infallible plan…"

—We're going to… actually discuss it, or…— Micah began asking, but trailed off.

—If we can skip it, then no. I don't have anything yet— his sister admitted, a bit sheepish.

—Alright. We'll just leave you two "talking" and go to Esmeralda— Norwyn accepted. —Will you do anything?

—Any chance I can study while having lunch?

—For real!?— Castaspella exclaimed.

—You do it, don't you?— she reproached her.

—You're terrible…

—What do you wish to study? I'll allow you to choose one theme to have available between the books you've gotten for school.

—Well, I actually planned on studying the school itself, precisely— she revealed, smirking under the veil.

—Alright. You have a book about the institution with you. Roll history and we'll see what you learn from it.

—History is with what stat?

—Intelligence again— he sighed.

—Then this is a non-natural twenty— she replied, after rolling a seventeen.

—Lucky bitch…— Castaspella muttered.

—Fortunate for this representation of you, wouldn't you say?— Light Spinner mocked her.
—What do I learn?

—Well, it's quite a good roll… First of all, you learn that there are several secret rooms in this school. Besides that, you learn there are also powerful artifacts in some of those rooms. Ancient and with the ability to grant anyone, regardless of skill level, the possibility of casting mighty spells— he narrated. —And since it's a non-natural twenty, you also find a map in the book, but the secret rooms aren't marked.

—That's useful…

—Shall we end lunch here?

—Sure— they all agreed.

—Then it's duel time. A voice broadcasted like before announces the classes for all years, and once again, the lizard familiar appears to guide the freshmen to an outdoors field.

—Will there be no one moderating the duels!?— Micah asked, worried.

—Why don't you roll perception?

—We keep forgetting…— Castaspella uttered, apologetic.

The three rolled a die each, Light Spinner twice since she has advantage, and while Micah rolled a seven, the sorceresses both rolled eighteen, adding the bonuses.

—Let's see… Micah- Excuse me, Mike. You're too distracted, still thinking about whatever Beatrix told you during lunch, so you don't notice the tall elf with blue and golden robes that is standing on the sidelines— he began. —On the contrary, you two do notice, and as they nod at the lizard familiar, you suppose that's either its owner or someone who knows the owner. Hence, you can suppose that's a professor who will monitor the duels.

—Can we investigate?

—Sure, Casta.

The sorceresses rolled once more, Castaspella a non-natural twenty, and Light Spinner an eighteen.

—Quite good— Norwyn commented. —Well, Esmeralda realizes this must be a professor, indeed, yet not the owner of the familiar— he first explained. —Beatrix, on the other hand, notices some students from superior years salute the elf with respect, making it clear they are a professor, and distinguishes a badge on their chest, clipped to their robes.

—What do I roll to try to recognize the badge?

—History.

Castaspella picked up the die once more, rolled a fourteen with the intelligence bonus, and checked her character sheet.

—I don't have any more bonuses…

—That's enough for you to recall where you've seen their face before. This professor is none other than a renowned duelist champion.

—Oh, I'm definitely going to speak with them— Castaspella decided.

—Of course— Light Spinner chuckled.

—So you approach them?

—Yes. I walk up to them, and, uh… present myself?— she hesitantly said. As Norwyn gestured at her to speak, the young sorceress tentatively began —"Good afternoon, uh…"

—"Freshman, are you not?"

—"Yes."

—"Then you can save your flattery. Show me what you've got against another student, and I may be interested in your name."

—Well, Beatrix is certainly offended now— Castaspella giggled. —Alright, how are we doing this? Are we fighting against each other or against NPCs?

—You choose…

The three exchanged questioning glances, before finally deciding.

—NPCs— they simultaneously said.

—Alright. The duels are individual. Who goes first?

—I'll nudge Mike— the young sorceress replied, giving her brother a look.

—Alright, sure— he accepted. —Who am I up against?

—A halfling— Norwyn decides, having rolled a die. —Let me see, this is their health, and these actions… Alright. We're ready. You two step into the designated area for the duel, and the professor signals you to begin. Roll initiative.

—I got a fifteen.

—Then you begin.

—Can Beatrix speak to him?

—She can always shout, yes.

—Alright. "Go all out and don't lose focus, Mike! Use your powers without fear! Don't disappoint me!"

—That's oddly encouraging. And a bit threatening— Micah nervously giggled.

—As intended— Castaspella admitted.

—Just fight already— Light Spinner spat, annoyed.

Nodding, the sorcerer rolled to hit and got an eleven.

—That doesn't hit. What did you try to do?

—I had my phoenix swing the axe like before…

—Well, the halfling is fast enough to avoid it— Norwyn explains. —And now… He makes his familiar, a wolf, take an anthropomorphic form too and it throws a pair of daggers at you. Does a fourteen enter?

—Fortunately not— he sighed, relieved.

—So they miss, and the professor has them stop before they hit some bystander students.

—My turn again. I'll swing the axe once more…. A six!?

—That misses too, and the axe buries into the ground. You'll have to roll strength to lift it again next turn.

Keeping herself in-character, Castaspella shook her head, disappointed.

—I'm just being unlucky!

—For Beatrix, you're just making a fool of yourself…

—Alright. The halfling has disappeared from view as they hid, and now attack from behind you. Does a- Well, of course a nineteen must hit.

—Yes— Micah lamented.

—Alright… The attack deals twelve damage.

—Tha-that's almost all my health! I'm in three HP!

—In that case, the professor ends the duel— Norwyn decides.

—Neither of us can do anything to heal him, right?— Light Spinner asked.

—No, unfortunately, I don't think either of you have healing spells available. But it's unnecessary. The professor instructs a pair of older students to take Mike to the infirmary.

—Oh, damn…— he lamented. —Will it count as a short rest, at least?

—Of course.

—Not like you had anything other than health to recover— the old sorceress pointed out.

—You should have used rage— both women simultaneously said.

Castaspella chuckled a bit and then added —I reckon the halfling attack was piercing damage and, in rage status, you would have had resistance. Plus, the bonus damage if you had landed a hit, of course.

—Yes, yes. I should have…— he admitted, looking away.

—Alright. Who goes next?

—I will.

—Very well. Beatrix will go against a dwarf… So you both step into the area and… roll initiative.

—Sixteen.

—Alright. You go first too.

—I'll start with "ray of frost"— Castaspella explained, before rolling the die. —A Seventeen should hit, right?

—It does. Roll damage.

—Oh, yes!— she celebrated, having rolled the maximum damage for the spell.

—Your toad takes an anthropomorphic form, and casts a ray of frost which fully hits your enemy. So, minus eight, that leaves the dwarf with four hit points, meaning the duel ends— Norwyn informed.

—Already!?

—It was a level two wizard with twelve HP…

—Oh… I went a bit overkill…

—You went all out like I would have— Light Spinner pointed out. —I'll definitely have to control myself then.

—As you wish…— Norwyn sighed. —You'll face an elf. Roll initiative, would you?

—Nineteen.

—You definitely go first.

—Alright… Let me see… I'll cast "charm person" and try to avoid the fight…— she decided.

—You'll use a level one spell slot for this!?— Castaspella reacted.

—I know you would if you could— the old woman mocked her. —So you have to roll a wisdom saving throw. Though I don't know what's the difficulty challenge for me— she had to admit.

However, as Norwyn rolled immediately, he shook his head and replied —Never mind. I rolled a four and the DC base number is always eight… The elf is now charmed.

—I'll approach and…

—Ah, wait. You cast a level-one spell. Roll a d-twenty.

—Ah, right… The wild magic origin. And… it's a damned one!

—Let me roll the wild magic surge, then— Norwyn chuckled. —That's… Fifty-nine. You regain your lowest-level expended spell slot.

—That- Wait, that was actually pretty lucky!— Micah noticed.

—Incredible— Castaspella sighed in disbelief.

—Well, now yes. I'll try to dissuade the elf from fighting. I'll approach and say "Please, listen. We-we don't have to fight, alright?"

—"Except that you do" the professor interrupts— Norwyn chimed in. —"Attack, young lady."

—"But…"

—"No buts."

—There goes the accuracy…— Light Spinner grunted. —Alright. I'll just go with "acid splash". It's a cantrip so it shouldn't trigger the wild magic surge— she decided.

—Alright… The elf is charmed, so… disadvantage in the save roll… It's a one. Oh, well… Roll damage— he requested.

—If I roll a six- Ah, damn… a five— she let out. —So much for holding back.

—The elf is left with three hit points, and the duel ends…

—These were so short…— Castaspella lamented. —But, on that note, Beatrix finds Esmeralda's actions to be quite smart. Regardless of whether she wanted to fight or not, using a charming spell first gave her an unexpected edge, so I'm now definitely going to talk to her.

—Of course you would— Light Spinner laughed. —Good luck convincing me of anything. You're not… that foolish when it comes to people with bad intentions. I'll give you that.

—Alright. But that will have to wait again, this time because the professor, after seemingly consulting the reptile familiar, tells you both you're required at the headmaster's office.

—The heck did we do!?— the young sorceress immediately asked.

—Was that in-character?

—No…

—In any case, the professor doesn't tell you; you're just immediately teleported to the corridor where you'll find the office.

—Sure… teleport us just like that, why not…— Light Spinner scoffed.

—What will you do?

—Walk in, I presume— Castaspella sighed.

—So you open the door and enter the office?

—Sure.

—Alright. You walk into an empty room filled with trinkets and shiny decorations of all shapes and sizes. There's a somewhat neatly-ordered chaos to this place, and the only clear space is the oak desk to your left.

—So, I'll say "What an interesting place", and roll perception, obviously— the old sorceress decided. —That's fifteen.

—You're pretty overwhelmed by everything in the office, but manage to distinguish something strange next to the desk. You're sure there's a camouflaged figure standing there— Norwyn narrated.

—I'm rolling right now— Castaspella let out, picking up her die. —Non-natural twenty.

—Good. Be it because of your elf senses or just the very sharp eyesight you have, you perfectly distinguish the form of a human and feel power emanating from them. You know exactly where they are. And something tells you they aren't friendly…

—Well, get ready for a constitution saving throw— she smirked. —I'll cast "frostbite".

—Just like that!?— Light Spinner inquired, confused. —Am I that hot-headed?

—Sometimes— the three agreed.

—Make that damned roll, Norwyn…

—Alright. Your DC was how high?

—I think it's- Wait… How did I calculate it, again?

Before he could reply, Norwyn noticed Light Spinner giving him a look, and he subtly nodded at her.

—Normally, it would be eight, plus your proficiency bonus, plus your intelligence modifier. However, due to your familiar, change it to your enhanced wisdom modifier.

—Re-really!?

—House rules— he nodded.

—Oh… That's like… Fifteen?

—The spell hiding the human banishes as frostbite overtakes their body, and you both suddenly see the white-haired person standing next to the desk— Norwyn narrated. —Roll the damage— he requested.

—So, four…

—The human takes the damage and looks quite angry. Roll initiative, both of you.

—I won't like this…— Castaspella muttered. —Five.

—Seven.

—Esmeralda goes first, then the human, then Beatrix.

—"Acid splash" it is… Dexterity saving throw. So we said- Ah, no, you didn't tell me how to calculate the DC.

—Add your proficiency bonus and your charisma modifier to eight.

—That'd be just ten…

—You have no charisma modifier!?— the young sorceress exclaimed.

—No… Didn't think it would fit.

—But sorcerers use charisma for everything— Micah pointed out.

—You've got to be joking…

—Did I or did I not tell you to ask Norwyn what stat to prioritize!?

—Look at that… So I accidentally made you more accurate than intended— Light Spinner mocked her, smirking behind the veil.

—Fuck you. I want to see how you do now with that poorly built sorcerer— Castaspella rebuked.

—Alright. That's enough. You're lucky… The spell hits. Roll damage.

—That'd be a six— she laughed, having rolled maximum damage.

—How on Etheria are you two so lucky with your rolls!?

—I suppose you spent all your luck rolling your familiar and that first attack, Brother.

Grumbling, the sorcerer folded his arms and laid back on his chair, upset.

—The human is now on the verge of dying but still tries to attack Beatrix— Norwyn continued. —They take out a dagger and use "true strike" before attacking.

—Moment— Light Spinner interrupted Norwyn, right before he could roll to hit. —That's very adorable, but with the frostbite on them, they have disadvantage on weapon attack rolls — she reminded him.

—Right… Let's see then… Eleven.

—Defense wins in a tie?

—Always.

—Then it doesn't land— Castaspella sighed.

—Alright. The human stumbles forward, as their body is a bit numb from the frostbite, and narrowly misses your shoulder.

—I'm not taking any chances— she stated, shaking her head. —"Poison spray" and hopefully that's all.

—That's- Ah… fine. Roll to hit. And let's not forget to add your proficiency bonus and intelligence modifier this time.

—Oh, right, I almost forgot… Eight, plus the proficiency is ten, plus intelligence is thirteen.

—It lands— Norwyn sighed. —Roll damage.

—Four…

—As your spell literally sprays poison over them, you hear them scream in agony and fall to the ground. You killed the human— he declared.

—Oh no…

—They were ominously hiding there. I think it's very justified— Light Spinner scoffed.

—And that's why Beatrix isn't affected, right, Sis? But I reckon Esmeralda is— Micah pointed out, wanting to participate a bit.

—Yeah… That's… Yes— his sister had to admit.

—Correct. Which means Esmeralda is now freaking out.

—Then I approach her and hold her by the shoulders. "Alright. Calm down. We had no choice."

—"What do you mean!? You attacked first! We don't know what they were doing!"

Castaspella had to bite her lip to stay in-character, but promptly continued —"They were hiding, and I could feel their intentions weren't good. You should be thanking me."

—"Just- I need to leave."

—Wait— Norwyn interrupted. —Your passive perception was seventeen, right?— he asked Castaspella, who nodded in reply. —Then you hear footsteps approaching.

—"That's not a good idea. Someone's coming. We have to hide!"

—Esmeralda is a bit reluctant but finally accepts. "Fine. But where!?"

—I'll just drag her to the back of the room and get us behind… whatever there is— Castaspella explained.

—Then roll stealth. Both of you— Norwyn ordered.

—Seventeen in total.

—Fifteen. Is that enough?— Light Spinner asked.

—It is. You both hide behind several tall piles of books right before the door opens. From there you hear "Ah… I suppose I was right. They do have quite some potential."

—Can I take a peek?— Light Spinner then asked.

—Roll stealth again…

—Ah… Yes. That's nineteen.

—You see the headmaster, standing in from of the dead human, and carrying none other than the reptile familiar you had investigated before.

—What!?— the three exclaimed.

—But that's not all. As he leaves, you hear him saying "A shame I missed them. I'll have to wait until the 'exam' to see what they can do…"

—Wait… What!? Do-does that mean the exam to fight other students!?— Micah exclaimed, eyes wide open.

The other three couldn't help laughing at his expression.

—The first thing Norwyn told us about this campaign was that we'd be fighting, everyone against everyone, by means of the familiar we summoned— Castaspella finally reminded him. —That's what you couldn't remember, Brother— she giggled.

—Now you, Beatrix and Esmeralda, know. Mike remains oblivious. And before I forget, you two got two hundred experience from fighting the human. So, what will you do now?

—I will check the desk. Perhaps there's a useful document— the young sorceress decided.

—Well, Esmeralda definitely wants to leave as soon as possible.

—Then, when I see her trying to leave, I'll stop her. "We may not have another chance to investigate this place!"

—"What do you want from here!?"

—"Didn't you hear him!? He will make us all fight to the death! He just found a dead student here and did nothing*! We need- I don't know, just* something to have the upper hand! If you're so mortified about killing them, how will you handle fighting to the death with your classmates!?"

—"But- No, no. There has to be a way to stop the headmaster!"

—"There might be. Help me search this place, join me and help me find something that may give us an edge! There are so many things here… Perhaps we can find an enchanted artifact, a source of power even the headmaster can't fight!"— Castaspella spoke, in-character.

—You would never agree to that… Especially if I roll insight and realize you're just looking for something to make you more powerful.

—Fine! Roll insight and let's see if Esmeralda is convinced or not!

—With the bonus, it's eighteen— Light Spinner clarified.

Norwyn only gave Castaspella a look.

—Alright… You see right through me. But that doesn't mean I won't use that power to end the headmaster before he can make us kill each other!— she argued.

—Would that be enough to convince you?

—Not without certain conditions.

—Then let's negotiate— Light Spinner proposed.

—"Listen. What was your name?"

—"Esmeralda."

—"Alright. Esmeralda. Sure, you're right. I want more power. Can you blame me!? We're talking about the headmaster! We will need more power to take him down! Who knows how long he's been doing this!?"

—Hmm… I'll think about it a moment, then say "I… suppose you're right. And that lizard is his familiar, meaning he's the one with draconic magic. But- It's just that- How do I know you won't hoard that power and join him or become even worse than him!?"

—Is that what you would do!? Damn…— Castaspella scoffed. —You know what? This may be a bit out of character, but Beatrix will promise "I shall not. But, if I try to take the power for myself, use that wild magic of yours to take me out."

—Isn't that a bit extreme, Sis?— Micah asked, concerned.

—It's what would convince me.

—Then it's a deal. Esmeralda accepts.

—Very well— Norwyn nodded. —Let's finish with you two, so we go back to Mike.

—We'll roll perception, I reckon?

—Yes…

While Light Spinner rolled twice for the advantage, Castaspella got a natural twenty and screamed in joy.

—See!? So much luck!— Micah complained.

—Alright, alright— Norwyn chuckled.

—I got an eighteen…

—Good then. Beatrix finds a strange page among the papers on the desk that she can't understand, but can feel it's important. Besides that, you find many books in draconic. Perhaps too many.

—Someone's obsessed with dragons, huh?

—On the other hand, Esmeralda finds a book about ancient artifacts, and then notices the page Beatrix found. It's semi-transparent and seems to fit something you've seen before.

—Hold up!— Light Spinner interrupted him. —Is it part of the map!?

—It is— he admitted, hiding his surprise at how easily she figured it out.

—Alright. Let's go and then I'll ask her for the page to check how it fits the map. And I'll take the book about artifacts, just in case— she decided.

—Then you leave… So now we'll go with Mike.

—Have I recovered?

—Yes. Your health is fully restored.

—Good! What can I do now?

—You can leave or you can check the infirmary, I suppose.

—I'll leave. Do we have any more classes?

—None. Evening is falling, and the same voice from earlier announces dinner is ready.

—Then I'll go to the dining room. I could find them there, right? Or at least Beatrix, since I'm supposed to be teaming with her.

—You can go, yes— he nodded at Micah. —Are you two going to have dinner too?

—I'd propose we sit away from other students and come up with a plan— Castaspella suggested. —And of course, if Mike finds us, we can update him.

—In that case, roll perception, Micah.

—Let's see… Can I find them with a fourteen?

—Yes.

—"Hey, Beatrix! Who's your new friend?"

—"Ah, Mike. Finally, you join us."

—"Are you feeling better? You were terribly hurt"— Light Spinner asked, in-character.

—"I'm fine, thank you. Oh, wait. I remember. You're… Esmeralda, right?"

—"We have a lot to discuss, Mike. Take a seat."

—Alright. Both me and my character will go for some food first— Micah decided.

—Sure— Castaspella chuckled. —Then while Mike is gone, I'll show the estrange page to Esmeralda.

—Ah, yes— the old sorceress recalled. —So, I'll take out the book about the school, open the map and try to fit the page over the map. Should I roll anything?

—No. You can easily see what the page is: it marks the secret rooms you had read about— Norwyn explains.

—I'll tell her.

—I'm back— Micah announced. —And so is Mike. "What is that? A map of what?"

—"It is this school. These are secret rooms that may be filled with magical artifacts. And… I happened to find a book about them, so…"

—"That could work against the headmaster"— Castaspella smirked, in-character.

—"You- Wait, the headmaster!? What did I miss!?"

—"Do you remember what I told you about a test, Mike? It's actually a massacre. He will have us fight each other."

—"What!? Why!?"

—"Wish I knew… But, that explains why the other years have such reduced groups of students"— Light Spinner commented, doing her best to sound nervous as Esmeralda would be.

—"Alright. I think we should search for one of these rooms tonight."

—"Why the rush, Beatrix?"

—"We don't know how much time we have or if we'll find something right away."

—"Fine"— Light Spinner sighed. —"Will you join us, Mike?"

—"Sure!"

—That means no one is getting a long rest— Norwyn clarified.

—We have no need for a rest, I believe— Castaspella pointed out.

—As you wish. Anything else you want to do before jumping to the end of the dinner?— he asked.

—I don't think so— the young sorceress denied.

—No, I'm fine— her brother agreed.

—I think that's all. But I'll make more coffee— Light Spinner replied.

—Sure. I have to go to the bathroom again. When I return, we can see how your nocturnal expedition goes— he told them.

—Your age is catching up with you, Old Ram— she mocked him.

Without so much as an eye-roll, he ignored her and left the room.

—Hey, Sis— Micah called, after a moment. —You're… playing a very convincing character, huh?

—Thank you— she proudly smiled. —Don't let her know, but I'm obviously exaggerating some stuff. Not everything is how she's seen— she then added, lowering her tone and giggling.

—So I hoped, yes. It's quite a… lawful evil character.

—Precisely.

—And what do you think of how Light Spinner is playing Esmeralda?

—I… can't say it's that bad…— she had to admit. —I still think she's making me too awkward, but she took the negotiation part pretty seriously, so… Yeah, I'd say it's not a bad representation— she chuckled.

As Micah laughed with her a bit, Light Spinner returned to the table with some freshly brewed coffee in a pair of mugs.

—What are you too giggling about?

—Nothing, nothing…— Castaspella was nonchalantly replying, when the sorceress set one of the coffee mugs in front of her. —Oh, wow, thank you.

—I may have made too much, think nothing of it— she quickly dismissed her.

—Sure— the siblings let out, deadpan, before laughing at how they both did the same.

—Sometimes I forget that you're brother and sister…

—Are we ready to continue?— Norwyn asked, walking into the room.

—Of course.

—Very well— he sighed, sitting down. —We're at the end of dinner. This is the map of the school, and this is where you three are— he explained, using an illusion to create a map and locating the three miniature illusions of their characters on the area labeled as "dining room". —There you can see three different secret rooms on this same level. Which one will you go to?

—Are there more levels?

—Of course, but you only have the extra page for the map of this level.

—Neve mind, then— Light Spinner had to accept. —Alright. My character would never take the lead, so that's going to be your responsibility.

—Oh, come on! What do you mean I wouldn't take the lead!?

—Right. My bad— she rolled her eyes. —You could take the lead, so could Esmeralda. But would you have a plan?

—No…

—Meaning she wouldn't either.

—Fine. Whatever. You're the only one with real plans. Then tell me: what would Beatrix do!?

—Much as it amuses me that you try to represent each other so accurately…— Norwyn interrupted. —The idea is to play yourselves. Regardless of what Light Spinner would do, what do you, Castaspella, think she would do?

—Alright— she sighed. —You're right. Then… Um… Beatrix will suggest we go to the farthest one; it's less likely anyone will see us sneak into the secret room.

—Will you two follow her?

—Sure…

—Alright— he nodded. As the miniatures moved over the map, he rolled a few dice and finally revealed the room. —You find yourselves in front of a mechanical door. It has an intricate system of metal gears and bolts.

—I reckon none of us has a "thieves' tools" pack, right?— Castaspella asked.

—Is it necessary to unlock doors? Don't you just need sleight of hand?

—You need the tools to pick locks, and if you have the proficiency, then you get a bonus…

—But then…

—Are you two done?— Light Spinner interrupted. As the siblings fell silent, she asked Norwyn. —I rolled an eighteen in perception. What do I see about the door?

—It's not locked.

—Then I push it open. "You're welcome."

—"So much for a secret room…"

—I'll be a bit more positive about this— Micah decided. —"I mean, at least we're in and no one saw us."

—Well then, we're inside, right?— Castaspella asked. As Norwyn nodded, she asked him — What does my passive perception tell me? Does anything call my attention?

—For seventeen… Yes. Something does. A box resting on top of a pile of books.

—I'll approach and roll perception to check for traps— she decided. —It's a sixteen.

—Good. There are no traps. You can reach for the box.

—Then I grab it.

—Do you open it?

—Yes— she sighed, half expecting to trigger something.

—Inside the box, you find an odd-looking ring.

—I most likely have no idea what this is, so I'll go to Esmeralda. She has that book about artifacts, and it might be there.

—Alright. But before that, do any of you want to investigate the room too?

—I actually didn't walk in— Micah clarified. —Mike is just keeping watch at the door.

—As you wish. What about Esmeralda?

—I'm looking for more maps or books— Light Spinner replied. —And with the advantage, I roll… a nineteen.

—Good. You find an old pamphlet about a group of students who call for a rebellion against the headmaster— he began. —But that's not all. You also find a spell you can cast on a familiar to give a disadvantage on save rolls to its owner.

—That's home-brewed, right?— the old sorceress asked.

—It is… Just tell me when you want to use it. It lasts "an hour" or until you're knocked unconscious.

—I think that will be quite useful— she snickered.

—Alright. Then I'll approach her now. "You took that book about artifacts from the office, right, Esmeralda?"

—"What did you find?"— Light Spinner sighed, bothered as her character would be.

—"Look at this ring and see if it's there."

—"Would a 'please' kill you?"

—You did not just say that!— Castaspella laughed.

—I did. But focus now. Norwyn, do I find the ring in this book?

—You do. The ring is a one-use artifact that lets you cast a level eight spell called "dominate monster".

—What!?

—I'm saving this— the young sorceress nervously laughed. —Can we check for anything else, or…

—Wait. Norwyn, what does the pamphlet say?

—Just speaks about how all students and professors should rally against the headmaster.

—Does it mention any meeting place? Something?

—It's fairly old, but yes, it speaks about the backyard of the school…

—Time?— Light Spinner insisted.

—Midday.

—"I'd suggest we pay these people a visit tomorrow"— she told Castaspella, in-character.

—"We'll need more people, yes."

—"Then we should get some sleep while we can and go there during lunch." And I'll head for the exit.

—Do you leave too?— Norwyn asked the young sorceress.

—Yeah, I'll follow her outside and we can tell Mike what we found.

—Alright. As soon as you're out and closed the door, the whole room is gone. No more door — he narrated.

—"That's… Not ominous at all"— Micah commented, in-character. —"Alright. What did you find?"

—"We may have a way to gain more allies to face the headmaster. After our morning classes tomorrow, we'll skip lunch and go to the backyard of the school. There's a group of students who want to rebel"— his sister explained, almost forgetting to act all proud like Beatrix would. However, she realized and used a more stern and proud tone to add —"I am sure they will join us. It's the most logical thing to do."

—"Should I get us some healing potions, then?"— he proposed. —I mean, Mike has been at the infirmary, so I can go there again, right?

—Sure… Would you want to play that, or should we just jump to the next day and roll to see what potions and how many you got?

—Oh, we can skip like that?

—If you want.

—Alright— Micah agreed.

—Then it's the next day. You had only a few hours of sleep, which would count as a short rest, but none of you had anything to recover, right?— Norwyn inquired.

—No, nothing— Castaspella confirmed.

—Good then. Let's start rolling what Mike found. Use the d-twenty first— he requested. Micah rolled the die, got a four, and he explained —That's a common "potion of healing". Now roll a d-ten.

—Three…— he sighed, frustrated.

—You now have three common "potions of healing". They heal two d-fours of health plus two. And now! You have theoretical classes all morning, and then it's finally time for lunch. The three of you are going to the backyard, right?

—Yes— Light Spinner nodded, seconded by the siblings.

—Alright. You find a reduced group of students from different years, seemingly resting and chatting against the brick wall of the school. What do you do?

—I still have the pamphlet?— the old sorceress asked, to which he nodded. —Then I approach them and take it out. "Excuse me, are you the ones who made this?"

—The only one who looks back at you is an elf from senior year. "Ah, I knew those were still around…"

—I'll approach too— Castaspella chimed in. Clearing her throat to get in-character, she began —"We're looking for the rebels who made that pamphlet."

However, Norwyn quickly interrupted.

—"We don't do that anymore. Right guys?" And the others lazily agree. You can try to convince them, but they don't seem very willing.

—Then I'll roll persuasion— Light Spinner decided. —What stat was it with?

—Charisma. Which you don't have…

—Then let me do it instead— Castaspella proposed. —Beatrix will try to convince them.

—What do you tell them?

—"Listen. We may be freshmen, but we are not going to sit and do nothing while that barbaric test takes place and makes us fight against each other to the death*! You have to help us! Join us, and we can take down the headmaster like you wanted!*" And I roll… a ten. No, twelve. Ugh… It's not enough, is it?

—No. The elf waves a hand dismissively and says "Nah. Forget it. It's a suicide mission."

—Then what about intimidation?

—You'd go from trying to win them over with that speech to simply- What? Yelling at them?

—You have a tendency to get enraged when people reject you like that.

—That's… right— she grunted.

—Tell us what Beatrix says and does, then roll…

—"Are you such cowards you can't even stand by the movement you created!? You call yourself 'rebels'!? Weaklings and fools! All of you!"— Castaspella exclaimed, acting angry in-character. —And I roll… A damned ten with the bonus! Where did my luck go!?

—Well, they are now just dispirited and even less willing to join you.

—Damn it!

—Uh… Can I roll perception?— Micah interrupted.

—Su-sure? What are you looking for?— Norwyn asked.

—I just want to see if there's anything I should be worried about.

—Right. Roll— he requested. As the sorcerer got an eighteen, he smirked slightly and told him —You notice there is something worrying indeed. The reptile familiar you know well is currently high up in the brick wall and has been spying on you.

—"Uh, guys… We have company."

—"It's the headmaster's familiar!"— Light Spinner said, in-character.

—The group of students is now alert. They all perk up and suddenly struggle to get up and run away. Then, you hear a voice behind you say "It is."

—Damn it…— Castaspella muttered.

—"What was that about a rebellion against me, freshmen?"

—Alright, so I turn around and reproach him "Y*ou can't make us fight and kill our classmates!*"— the young sorceress decided.

—I turn around, a bit more scared, and don't say anything.

—Me too— Micah nervously agreed.

—"I can't, you say? And who will stop me? You?"

—A-are we really about to fight the headmaster who may have draconic magic?

—You can always try to convince him otherwise, but… He's not in a friendly mood at all.

—Forget it! We're fighting!— Castaspella immediately reacted. —We have no choice!

—I take it you don't back down, then…— Norwyn insisted.

—I actually want to fight him too— Light Spinner admitted.

Norwyn's face immediately contorted into a pained grimace as he looked at the old woman.

—Why doesn't it surprise me…

—So… we roll initiative?— Micah asked, resigned.

—Actually— Norwyn began, between regretful and malicious. —The headmaster in front of you starts to laugh. His voice distorts into a growl, and you see his familiar rapidly approach him before he starts morphing into a tall creature.

—Wait, what!?— Castaspella exclaimed.

—After a moment, a green dragon stands in front of you.

—Norwyn! We're level one!— Light Spinner pointed out, indignant.

—I did try to warn you…

—The damned draconic- The office!— the young sorceress suddenly realized. —It was full of trinkets and shiny decorations! How did we not realize!?

—Unfortunately, it's time for you to roll initiative.

—We're really doing this…— Micah let out, rolling the die. —I got an eighteen.

—Sixteen— Light Spinner told him. —What a bad moment to have a poorly built sorcerer.

—Heck, a seven— Castaspella complained.

—Then the order is as follows: Mike, Esmeralda, the dragon, and then Beatrix— Norwyn explained, creating a "miniature" illusion of the dragon, which was at least twice as tall as the three characters.

—I go first. Alright— Micah nodded, seemingly relieved.

—Just great— his sister complained, folding her arms.

—Well. I'll obviously enter rage now— the sorcerer decided. —Or my phoenix does. So I raise a hand and yell…

—I swear, if you say "for the honor of something" I'll get up and leave— Castaspella warned him.

—No-no. Mike will say "For the power of Arxia!"

The sorceresses immediately facepalmed, and even Norwyn was in utter disbelief.

—You can't be serious…

—Anyways, I'll roll to hit and… my proficiency is two and my strength is three… So It's a twenty-two— he decided to go on, as if nothing had happened.

—It enters.

—Oh, good— Castaspella sighed.

—That's a d-twelve plus two from the rage, and I add my strength modifier too?

—Yes.

—Then eight, ten… thirteen damage— he counted.

—What about the proficiency bonus?— Light Spinner reminded him.

—Then fifteen?

—Alright— Norwyn accepted. —Now it's Beatrix's turn.

—I'm obviously casting "magic missile".

—You know what that means, right?

—Yes, yes. The surge. Let me roll the damage first and then we see what effect got triggered — she reproached him. —So, my spider turns humanoid and casts the spell. All three missiles go to the dragon, and that's…— she began, rolling three d-four dice. —Two, two, three, plus three, and with the proficiency it's another two. That charisma would have been useful now… Well, that's twelve damage. And I spent a spell slot.

—Noted— Norwyn muttered, while writing down the damage done to the dragon. —Now roll a d-twenty.

—Damned one! Why do I always- Never mind. Roll the effect…

—Fifty-two. That's… A shield that gives you plus two to your armour class and immunity to "magic missile".

—Huh?

—At least you're getting good effects from the wild magic surge— Castaspella pointed out.

—Well… It is now the dragon's turn— he announced. After rolling the die, he hissed in pain. The other wouldn't know, but that was nearly a critical fail. —You're quite lucky. Does a thirteen hit any of you?

—The- Wait, all three of us!?

—Yes.

—Damn it— Castaspella muttered. —Yes, it hits.

—Defense wins, so it doesn't.

—Neither for me— Micah sighed, relieved.

—Alright. Then only Beatrix takes damage, and it's ten slashing damage.

—Oh, come on!

—You died, right?— Light Spinner asked.

—Yes!

—Well, then you'll have to use your turn now to roll a death saving throw.

—Let's be done with this…— she angrily muttered. —Thirteen.

—One to your favour— Norwyn nodded. —Mike?

—I'll attack again. And I roll… twenty-one in total— he sighed. —Please tell me it still enters…

—Yes— Norwyn nodded, barely holding back a smirk. —Roll the damage, then.

—That's thirteen in total— Micah replied, after rolling and adding all the bonuses.

—Then it's my turn. I won't risk another wild magic surge, so I'll roll to cast "acid splash"— Light Spinner spoke. —Ugh… Does fifteen hit?

—No…

—Damn it.

—The dragon attacks now, throwing his claws at you two— Norwyn announced. —Would a seventeen hit?

—Yes…— Micah lamented.

—It would, but…— the old sorcerer began, smirking. —I can cast a reaction spell called "shield" that raises my AC another five points, meaning it is now eighteen. It doesn't hit— she proudly announced.

—Alright. His claws hit your magical shields and you remain safe— he sighed, rolling his eyes. —But that's a level one spell and you know what that means…

—Right. You know what? Just roll for the surge effect. I keep rolling ones, anyways— Light Spinner scoffed, noticeably annoyed.

—I'll roll the damage to Mike and then the effect.

—How much will it hurt?— the sorcerer asked, bracing for impact.

—Twenty slashing damage.

—Oh no… My HP is fifteen…

—Hold up. You're in rage! Slashing damage is halved!— Castaspella reminded him.

—I live!— he excitedly exclaimed. —Barely… Should I take a health potion now?

—We're all fairly close to each other, right?— Light Spinner asked instead.

—Yes. You're next to each other— Norwyn confirmed, gesturing at the miniatures.

—Then better save the potions for when Beatrix stabilizes so she can regain consciousness and join us in battle again. We need a certain artifact she has— the woman reminded them.

—Trust me: if I hadn't died before my turn, I would have used it already— Castaspella assured her. —But yes, I suppose I'll need the potion for that.

—Now, the wild magic surge effect— he went on. —Sixty. Ah, the spell slot again.

—At least I'm getting good effects…

—In any case, roll the saving throw, Casta, will you?

—Sure…— she sighed. —Please, please… Oh, good, good… a ten. Barely there.

—Just one more turn, Sis— Micah tried to encourage her. —And I'll try to hit again… Uh, nineteen.

—Doesn't enter— Norwyn denied.

—Ah, what!?

—What will Esmeralda do?

—I'm attempting the "acid splash" again, of course— she grumbled. —But I'm not expecting much… Twelve. Ugh, forget it. Just hit me already. The shield lasted a single round so it must have just fallen…

—Then the dragon throws his claws at you two again, and… fifteen.

—Defense wins!— Micah exclaimed, relieved. —There's my luck again!— he celebrated.

—My AC is back to thirteen, so it hits me— Light Spinner admitted, looking away with a grimace.

—The dragon's claws barely miss Mike, but fully hit Esmeralda…

—I have six hit points, Norwyn. Just tell me if I die.

—You do.

—Then you better roll that third saving throw, Casta, or your brother is doomed.

—Yes, yes. I'm on it— she replied, rolling her eyes before taking the die. —Come on, be nice to me…— she muttered, enclosing the die between her hands which she began shaking left and right, as if she were dancing.

—Are you… doing some revival dance?— Micah asked.

—I am! Some of us don't have a familiar that helps with these throws— she reproached him. —And… Woohoo! A fourteen! I'm stable!

—Perfect. Mike, give her a healing potion.

—Will that consume my action?

—It will— Norwyn confirmed. —But it's your choice, of course. This will also end your rage.

The siblings exchanged a look for a moment, before he sighed, nodding.

—Sure, I'll give her the potion.

—Then roll two d-four dice, Casta.

—Erm, three.

—Plus two, you are now in five HP.

—We're both in five!? Damn it— Micah cursed. —Can I attract the attention to myself?

—What, why!?

—We need Beatrix to use the ring on the dragon…

—Alright, alright— Norwyn interrupted. —House rules: you used half your action to give Beatrix the potion, and now can use the other half of that action to taunt the dragon. But, first roll a performance check if you're just, moving away and yelling at him— he proposed.

—Alright, so… I leave the other two potion vials to Beatrix, then move as much as I can away from them, yelling at the dragon and waving my hands. The phoenix follows me and makes that screeching sound some birds do— he described, moving his miniature illusion before rolling. He got a seventeen. —Is it enough!?

—It is. You'll be the sole target in his next turn— the sorcerer confirmed. —Now, roll your saving throw, Light Spinner.

—Alright…

—Wait! You must do the dance!

—What!? No!

—It works!— Castaspella insisted. —Come on, Micah, let's do it for her, then.

—You're ridiculous…

The siblings got up from the table and began "dancing", shaking their bodies as if possessed, which made the old sorceress roll her eyes and try to ignore them.

Without looking, she let the die roll.

Her gasp when she saw it stop made the siblings halt and return to the table.

—See!? The dance works!

—She's back and conscious, right!?— Micah asked, surprised.

—Yes. It's a natural twenty— Norwyn chuckled. —So you also get to play your turn— he conceded.

—Oh, perfect— Light Spinner smirked. —Remember the homebrew spell I found? I want to use it now— she said, with a bit of a malicious look.

—Alright. Then Esmeralda takes out the papyrus with the spell, and points it at the dragon, which makes him roar angrily— he explained. —His familiar is now affected by the spell. Any saves he attempts to do will have disadvantage for an hour.

—Oh… Oh! I get it!— Castaspella realized. —That will keep him under the ring's spell! Yes!

—But we're fighting him. "Dominate monster" says he has advantage in that case— Micah pointed out.

—I am also casting that spell, which is level eight, being level one, Brother. I believe this doesn't work exactly like the normal spell.

Norwyn took a deep breath.

This is why he didn't really like using home-brewed features.

—I'll… admit that. The dragon has disadvantage even against "dominate monster"— he conceded, smiling gently. —But it is his turn to attack first, and he will throw his tail at you, Mike.

—Oh no…

—I reckon a nineteen lands.

—It does…

—Then you take, uh, ten bludgeoning damage as his tail descends over you— he announced.

That rolled low, fortunately for him…

—Alright, I'm dead— Micah lamented. —You two hang in there, I'll jump back soon with my familiar— he promised.

—Then I'll use the ring now— Castaspella sentenced. —So, Beatrix takes it out, and… activates it?

—Of course. The saving throw is with wisdom, right?

—Yes. The DC is fifteen— she reminded him.

—Well, he's charmed— he nodded, after rolling twice. —You can use a bonus action to issue orders to him— he explains.

—Then I'm sure as heck making him attack himself!— she laughed. —I… can do that, right?

—Yes…— Norwyn sighed. —Alright, this hits… and… it's max damage… Then another saving… disadvantage… that fails— he muttered, rolling and calculating under his breath. —Alright. Subject to the effect of the ring, you watch as the dragon claws at himself, roaring in pain. And yet, he looks charmed still…

—It is Mike's turn now. Roll your death saving throw.

—Oh, my… ten with the familiar bonus— he sighed, having felt his heart skip a beat when he rolled an eight.

—See!? That's why you must do the dance!— his sister reproached him.

—My turn— Light Spinner promptly said. —I'm casting "magic missile" again, and yes, I know… Just roll the effect after I deal the damage.

—Are you sure you don't want to roll?

—You heard me, Old Ram…

—Right— he resignedly accepted, rolling his eyes. —How much damage?

—Fifteen in total.

Once he wrote down the updated hit points for the dragon, he explained —As the dragon is charmed, the only action he can take now is to try to get rid of the spell. And… he fails again.

—Yes!

—What will you do with your turn?— he asked Castaspella.

—Can I use a bonus action to make him hurt himself again, and then my action to help Mike? We can do that thing where we help a fallen character, right?

—Rolling medicine with Wisdom, yes— he nodded.

—Great! With the shitty familiar I got, I better use that wisdom modifier, no?— she scoffed. —And I have the remaining healing potions…

—Very well. Tell me what you have the dragon do— Norwyn asked.

—Same as before, he attacks himself.

—Alright… It's- Oh…— he began, but interrupted himself seeing the result. A critical hit. —Well, that's definitely in— he muttered, rolling the damage and writing down the remaining health. —Well, you're close to half his health.

—What!? Just now!?— Castaspella complained.

—It's a green dragon. What did you expect?

—Damn it. Whatever. I'll roll the medicine check now— she grunted, moving her miniature closer to Mike. —That's a six, plus a total of five, eleven! He's stable!

—Perfect. You may give him the potion.

—You shouldn't have used your turn on that, Sis. You said it before! My familiar helps with the death saving rolls!

—Well, yes, but we need you to hit that thing— she insisted. —Now roll the healing from the potion— she prompted him.

Resigned, he did as she asked and wrote down the recovered hit points.

—Alright, you're back to eight HP. And it's your turn, Mike— Norwyn reminded him. —May I also remind you of your positions in relation to the dragon.

—I think you should move back to safety next turn, just in case the dragon frees himself— Micah told Castaspella.

—Alright. I'll move when it's my turn.

—Now, Esmeralda. What will you do?

Light Spinner checked her character sheet for a moment before resignedly saying —I'll cast "magic missile" again, I guess.

—Alright, your transformed familiar shoots three missiles at the dragon, which he can't avoid. How much damage?

—That's thirteen— she replied.

—Then let's roll the wild magic surge now… That's sixty-six, so… Up to three creatures you choose within- Wait… Alright. Up to three creatures you choose within thirty feet of you take four d-tens of lightning damage.

—What!?— Light Spinner reacted, in complete disbelief, albeit already smirking.

—That's insane!— Castaspella exclaimed.

—You two better share the luck with me, will you?

—Alright. I reckon you will hit the dragon…

—Obviously. But does the effect hit the dragon three times? Or…

—It says "up to three creatures", which is also very convenient since, otherwise, you would have had to hit your teammates.

—No saving throws, no nothing?

—No.

—What about hitting the dragon twice?

—We're not negotiating, Light Spinner…

—You said we're barely halfway there!

—You'll drive me insane…— the sorcerer muttered, covering his face with one hand. —You can deal six d-tens of damage then, but that's it!

—Alright. Pass me your d-tens, will you?

Rolling three dice at the same time, she rolled them twice and got a total of fifty damage.

—Very well— Norwyn sighed. —The dragon will attempt to free himself twice now.

—Once for the hit and once for his turn, right?

—Yes…— he replied, rolling the die several times. —Still charmed. I may have made a mistake…

—You think!?— Light Spinner mocked him. —We're level one! The fact that we're winning means nothing if, as soon as the dragon frees himself, he can still wipe us out!

—Calm down, woman— Castaspella scolded her. —Can't we just play the game in peace?

—Then go ahead— she retorted, rolling her eyes and folding her arms. —The night won't last forever…

—Fine, alright. I'll move back to where Esmeralda is, pass her a healing potion, and cast "magic missile" with my turn. No! Wait! First I command the dragon to attack himself, then cast the spell.

—Understood— he nodded. As he rolled several times, and wrote down a few things, he muttered —This… hits. The damage… and then… alright… And… still charmed.

—Great!— Castaspella celebrated. —And now I'll roll the damage of the missiles— she decided, picking up three d-four dice. —Good! That's six, plus three, nine damage!

—Very well. Your toad familiar takes humanoid form, shoots the missiles, and they hit the dragon in the chest, making him roar. It's Mike's turn now.

—I'll roll to hit…— he sighed. —Non-natural twenty.

—It enters. Your phoenix swings its axe at the dragon, and the hit lands right in the middle of his charred chest.

—Good— Micah smiled. —Now the damage… that's… eight damage in total— he counted.

—Alright— he nodded. He rolled once again to free the dragon from the charm but failed, and shook his head, trying to ignore the health count. However, his expression was a bit too telling, and he could feel the three of them staring at him. —Ah… Well, if Esmeralda hits, you may deal the finishing blow.

—And if she misses, I have one more spell slot for another "magic missile"— Castaspella cheerfully added.

—You'd steal the kill from… yourself?

—Right now, I am you: so yes, I would.

After a moment of shock, Light Spinner shook her head and rolled her d-twenty.

—Alright, “acid splash”. Does nineteen hit?

—No. Defense wins.

—That damned armour!

—I have to invent an attack roll dance— Castaspella considered.

—Just cast the damned spell and finish him— the old sorceress ordered her.

—Alright, alright!

And so she rolled: two, two, one, plus three…

—The three missiles hit his chest again, one after the other, making him roar loudly. You three see as he falls back with a booming sound, and little by little stops moving. He’s dead— Norwyn narrated.

—Woohoo!— the siblings celebrated, standing up to hug each other.

—I can’t believe what we just did…— Light Spinner sighed, resting back on her chair.

—Come on! We just defeated a green dragon! Being level one!— Castaspella insisted, walking around the table towards the old woman. —Don’t be so grumpy now…

—I am not, I am not…— she replied, but clearly couldn’t convince the sorceress, who tried to pull her up.

—Micah, help me!

—Micah, don’t— Light Spinner warned him.

—Oh, come on!

—I just don’t want to do your silly victory dance. You two do it…

—Boring…

—Yes, I’m the boring old hag. Now go, dance with your brother, and let me breathe…

—Suit yourself— Castaspella resignedly accepted. However, before leaving to join Micah, she added —And… you played a really cool version of me. Thanks.

—Your version of me wasn’t that bad either…— the woman smirked.

As the siblings celebrated, casting their miniature illusions a bit larger and making them dance around the fallen dragon, Norwyn decided it was time to pick everything up.

—Well played.

—How much advantage did you give us?

—Only what you know…

—So, what we negotiated, the house rules, the home-brew…

—Perhaps it was a lot, but you did derail everything to the point you preferred to face a green dragon instead of each other— he pointed out.

—We didn't know he was a dragon. And you didn't have to make him such a powerful foe, either— Light Spinner reproached him.

—The setting was built like that. I never thought you'd face him. The idea was…

—Was?

—He was a dragon from the beginning, and you had the chance to discover it. But that was supposed to scare you away from fighting him…— Norwyn explained, neatly ordering his things over the table.

—Masterful plan, as always, Old Ram— she snickered.

—You two! Come pick up your things!— he ordered the siblings, ignoring Light Spinner. —Come on, gather your dice, character sheets, and everything. We should leave this place clean as we found it.

—Right!— Castaspella realized, rushing to gather everything she had brought. —Let me pick this up…— she let out, using a spell to store all her dice in a bag and teleport it away to her room. Presumably. —And what do we do with the spare food?

—To the kitchen, I reckon— the old sorceress suggested.

—But it's so far… And we can't teleport carrying all of that…— Micah complained.

—I'll take it to the kitchen, Brother, don't worry.

—Ah… I'll help— Light Spinner resignedly sighed.

—You sure?

—Yes— they both nodded, clearing the table and setting aside the spare food.

—In that case, I'll pick up the wine you rejected, and take it back— Norwyn decided, giving the woman a look, obviously offended still. With the bottles in his hands and his gaming stuff under his arm, he farewelled —Good night, everyone. See you next time.

—Night!

—Night, Old Ram…

—Good night!— Micah waved. —I'll get going too, then. I'm beat…

—And it's past your bedtime— Light Spinner mocked him.

—I-I don’t have a bedtime!

—But you have to get up early, I reckon— Castaspella commented. —Unless Angella takes pity on you and lets you sleep in— she giggled.

—Very funny… Good night.

—Good night, Brother!

—Night…

The room was then left in silence as the women picked everything up and carefully took the food with them when leaving for the kitchen.

—The sun is… already…

—Rising. Yes.

—That was a long one-shot, huh?

—Could have been longer…

—Really?

—I kept track of the damage we did, and that thing must have had at least two hundred HP. I’m unsure how much damage his claws did to himself but, trust me, he was too powerful for us…

—Anything would have been too powerful for us. We were a level one party!

—Which is why we shouldn’t let Norwyn DM again…— Light Spinner smirked.

—Come on! You know he’s good!

—Sure…

Bantering about the campaign, the sorceresses eventually reached the kitchen and walked in, oblivious to the beautiful sunrise outside.

They had spent the whole night playing the campaign, and now felt a bit too awake to go to sleep…

And yet, eventually, we all need a long rest…

End Notes

Well! I sure hope you enjoyed all that… mess. <(“^_^)

My only regret is that no one rolled a one or two in perception. With my friends we have this phrase we say when that happens: “El piso es piso” (“The floor is floor”) which I would have loved to use lol

Now, some clarifications: the ridiculous revival dance Casta did: My friends did it.
I swear.
And while I played the lawful evil Beatrix in our campaign, I didn’t do the damned dance XD

On the other hand, I wanted to mention that “Esmeralda” is based on the character my BFF played, when intending to play me! Haha
And we really did the agreement thing to find the ring… etc, which at the moment made me think “this is so much like their deal in the woods… what if I made them play DnD in a fic…?” But, well, years passed before I actually sat and wrote it, hence the little adaptations I had to make.

Anyways! For those who know, in case you’re curious, here is some relevant info from the character sheets of the… uh… characters.

Anyways, that's all!! I hope you enjoyed! And if you have very nerdy comments super specific of DnD stuff I misrepresented or that just sound odd to you, feel free to leave them in the comments! I could have made a mistake or it could be related to how me and my friends play, but in any case, I'll be more than glad to discuss it! :D

Bye!
