Rude

by Xenakis (IceRosesCrown)

Summary

Shadow Weaver decides to learn Japanese with the sole intention of asking for Castaspella's hand… to Micah.
Is she stubborn or perseverant?
Is it just to annoy him or for tradition's sake?

Whatever the case, she won't stop until she gets a "yes".

Notes

So, uh, welcome to another attempt of mine at participating in a smubbles collection!

This time, language diversity is the theme, so I gave Japanese a shot… which I've been wanting to do for a while.

HOWEVER
My current Japanese level isn't that high yet, so, uh, I sure hope it's not too broken TT-TT
If any of you does know Japanese and can correct me, PLEASE do so!
I tried to get help but couldn't manage it, and the collection is closing tomorrow, so… well, I'll correct it if I do get help later on…

In any case, I hope you enjoy this fic!

It was a chill morning.

Castaspella enjoyed a cup of tea while observing her garden.

Beautiful green extended before her, some flowers gave it colour here and there, attracting butterflies and bees.

It was beautiful.

Until her partner utterly shattered her peace…

—Are you sure you want to do this, Bea?

—Absolutely— Shadow Weaver nodded, serious.

—But I have no parents…— she argued.

—Which is why I'll ask your brother.

—You want to ask Micah for my hand!?— she reacted, looking disgruntled.

—Of course.

—Listen, the bamboo letter was enough. You don't have to follow all my traditions…

—But I want to— Shadow Weaver insisted. —And I will.

—Don't tell me you learnt Japanese just for this…

—Maybe…

—Damn it— Castaspella let out, between gritted teeth.

—I don't expect him to accept, but I refuse to give up without trying, understood?

—You're too stubborn— the young woman sighed. —And why do this when I have always failed to follow your traditions? I can't speak a single sentence in Arabic.

—Trust me, Japanese is far easier than Arabic in that sense…— she snickered.

There was, in fact, nothing Castaspella could do about it. Shadow Weaver was dead set on asking Micah for her hand, and prepared everything necessary.

As she had mentioned, the old woman didn't expect him to give her his blessing… But she didn't care.

In fact, she was looking forward to telling him he'd have to get used to the idea of being family, because she would still marry Castaspella.

Like it or not.

That afternoon, while the young woman was working, Shadow Weaver went to visit Micah at his place.

—What are you doing here?— he asked, as soon as he opened the door.

—Who is it?— Angella asked, still sitting at the table and not even sparing a look in the door's direction.

—Good morning to you too, Micah— the old woman sardonically replied, without answering the question.

—Oh, I see— his wife noticed.

—I'll ask again: What are you doing here?

—Love, can't you let her in?

—No.

—Fine, don't let me in— Shadow Weaver scoffed. —Let's get this over with— she then sighed.

Without another word, she knelt and lowered her head until fully prostrated.

—What are you…— Micah began, yet trailed off as soon as he recognized what she was doing.

And then she spoke in almost-perfect japanese —妹さんと結婚させてください。 (imoto-san to kekkon sasetekudasai)

—Oh my Stars— Angella muttered, finally standing from the table to see what was happening. Without a second thought, she snaped a picture of Shadow Weaver doing the dogeza posture in front of Micah, and sent it to Castaspella. —She has to see this…

The young woman happened to be on her break, just sipping coffee carelessly, when her phone rang.

—Angella? What's- Oh, shit, she did not!— Castaspella let out, almost spitting her coffee upon seeing the picture. Immediately, she dialed her and didn't wait for her sister-in-law to answer before yelling —Tell her to get up right now and return to work! No-no, I don't care! She should be giving a class right now! Angella, are you listening to me!? It's not funny- Yes,

I knew she was going to- No! I don't care! Tell her to get up and go to campus now! Thank you!

Eyes closed, she ended the call and gulped down the rest of her coffee before heading back to the library.

She absolutely did not want to deal with the consequences of this now…

At the end of the day, when the women met to drive back home, Castaspella didn't miss a second before chastizing her.

—You knew I was going to…

—Not during work hours!

—I left the class in charge of my Teacher Assistant until I returned. What's the big deal?— the old woman asked, rolling her eyes.

—Beatrix, I'm serious. You can't ditch class for that… Besides, now I've been getting messages from Micah all day! I had to silence the phone!

—And you'll probably get more of them. I'm trying again tomorrow— Shadow Weaver smirked. —Get in the car already, will you?

—But- Ah… You're getting ridiculous, I swear— Castaspella huffed, albeit complying. —Is he even answering in Japanese? Cause if he's not, just… it's a lost cause.

—No, he's not answering in Japanese… But he looked like he wanted to insult me in six languages— the old woman snickered.

—Sometimes I think you enjoy pissing him off.

As promised, Shadow Weaver returned the following day to ask Micah for permission once again. It was making him angry, and yet, for some reason, he waited until she was done before closing the door in her face.

Without a word.

How rude…

But, of course, that didn't stop her.

Shadow Weaver went a third time.

—妹さんと結婚させてください。 (imoto-san to kekkon sasetekudasai)

Micah's eye twitched as he stared at her.

But he didn't immediately close the door.

This time, he answered —だめだ！結婚を許さない！ (Dame da! kekkon wo yurusanai!)

Basically, a very angry negative.

He won't let her.

Only then did he slam the door.

However, the old woman smirked as she stood up.

—So… how was today's attempt?— Castaspella sighed, once they both sat to have dinner.

—A negative, obviously— Shadow Weaver replied, with a chuckle that confused her partner.

—Why are you laughing then?

—Because… He replied— she said. Then, looking back at Castaspella, she added —In japanese.

—Oh… He-he did?

—As I said, a negative, but yes, he did.

Castaspella lowered her sight and, without a word, took a bite from her plate.

The old woman just waited as the silence stretched.

She knew her well, and realized she was just looking for the proper words.

—I… can't believe I'm saying this, but… you may have a chance, after all. I-I think you should try again…

—You can be sure I will— Shadow Weaver smirked, finally starting to eat.

The following days, as the old woman kept visiting him daily, she noticed Micah was now expecting her to show up.

And yet the answer remained the same, but the tone became harsher the fifth and sixth time.

Until…

Shadow Weaver showed up at his doorstep a seventh time. Without so much as a "hello", she once again did the dogeza posture and requested his sister's hand in marriage.

Micah sighed.

The old woman closed her eyes, took a deep breath, and waited for him to either say the usual, or directly close the door.

But instead, his tone was quite low when he replied —結婚を許す。(kekkon wo yurusu)

Her eyes immediately opened wide.

She was so sure he was denying her again… until he finished the sentence.

In complete disbelief, she looked up at him and asked —Really?

—Yes…— he nodded, looking away. —You're… quite persistent. And I realize you… made a great effort to… uh, properly ask and all, even if you didn't have to— he uttered, seemingly conflicted. —So, get up already…

Shadow Weaver could hardly believe the relief she felt.

With quite some effort, she stood up and hesitated for a moment, not knowing what to say or do.

—Tha-thank you— she finally stammered, before clearing her throat and extending her hand to him.

—Sure…— he chuckled, shaking her hand. —You better not make me regret this.

—Can't make promises- No, I can make one promise: I won't make her regret this— the old woman assured him. —As for you, that's a different matter— she smirked.

End Notes

Many thanks for reading, and once again, I hope you enjoyed it!

I swear one day I'll know enough Japanese to write something more proper…
And hopefully also Arabian to give Shadow Weaver the same treatment lol

Well, that's all for now! See you around!
