The Ring

by Xenakis (IceRosesCrown)

Summary

One afternoon, as they travel by bus…

Afternoon sun shone orange reddish rays through the bus windows as the women returned home.

Castaspella had started to doze off as soon as she sat down, and slowly fell against Shadow Weaver’s shoulder.

The old woman gazed at her for a long moment; first serious, then little by little her look turned softer.

Hesitantly, she reached for Castaspella’s face and brushed away her hair, which made her stir and sigh deeply, but didn’t wake her up.

A small smile escaped Shadow Weaver and, after a second, she got an idea.
She slowly withdrew her hand, reached into her purse, and took out a small box. Careful not to wake her up, the old woman opened it, revealing a golden ring.
The next moment, she was sliding it into Castaspella’s ring finger without her noticing.

The trip went on, the box disappeared into Shadow Weaver's purse again, and eventually, she had to wake the young woman up to get off the bus.

Groggy, Castaspella only grabbed her bag tightly and tried to keep her balance on her way to the door.

Shadow Weaver helped her down, guided her home, and they walked in, hand in hand.

She never noticed it.
