Therapy Cooking

by Xenakis (IceRosesCrown)

Summary

Catra accidentally walks into someone in Bright Moon's kitchen… And they cook together :D

Notes

This idea somehow spawned into life in a +18 channel (don't ask) and since Astryn said they loved the idea and wanted a fic, and fr so did I, well, here's what came out of it XD
It has potential to be longer, and who knows, I may add something else, but for now, have this one-shot!!
Edit: now two-shot!

Enjoy!! (I'll leave the recipe of what they cooked in Ch 1 in the corresponding ending note)

When Catra walked into the kitchen that afternoon, she wasn't expecting to find anyone.

Bright Moon's kitchen at that time was always empty.

But not this time.

—Oh- Shit, sorry!— she jumped, startled.

—Who- Oh, Catra? Good afternoon…

—I-I wasn't expecting anyone to be here…

—I realize— Castaspella laughed. —What brings you here?

—I should be asking that…

—Fair— the sorceress smiled. —I'm banned from Mystacor's kitchen because I tend to overtake the place when I cook… But, here, there's no one to stop me— she chuckled.

—Oh… I see. So, you were just…

—Letting out some stress, don't worry. You don't have to leave— she assured her.

—I-I just came for a quick snack. That's all— the magicat replied, checking the fridge.

—Well, there isn't really much in there, you know?

—There's some left-over from lunch, I think…

—That's junk food— Castaspella pointed out, resting against the counter. —Why don't I prepare you something instead— she offered, smiling gently.

—A-are you sure? I wouldn't want to impose…

—It's no problem at all— she insisted, seemingly more excited than Catra herself.

—Well, uh, sure then.

—Fantastic! What would you want?

—I… don't know. I've only ever eaten ration bars all my life. And if I don't count that strange alien food in Prime's ship, I've only had some… uh, dumplings? I think that's what Glimmer prepared when we were returning in Darla…

—Oh, dear child. How could you have gone so long without real food!?

—The Horde just… didn't have real food.

—No wonder— Castaspella sighed, rolling her eyes. —Then let's make something good! Would you prefer something sweet or savory?

—Um… Savory?

—Perfect! Let's check the recipes in… this book— she proposed, reaching for an old book on a high shelf. —This… Oh! What about this one!?

—Noodles with meat? I don't like soup that much…

—Oh, this one uses a little of water to cook the noodles but it's not soup— the sorceress assured her.

—Well, then, sure! Sounds good— Catra accepted.

—Let me gather everything then— Castaspella smiled, rushing around the kitchen to get everything necessary. —Minced meat, these for the sauce, instant noodles… And… some veggies. You can eat vegetables, right?

—I think?

—Oh, I sure hope you can.

—I hope so too— Catra chuckled, awkward. —So, uh… Can I help, maybe?

—Are you sure?

—Of course! It's the least I can do, right?

—Oh, you don't have to; I'll be happy to prepare this for you!

—But… I think I want to try. You said you were… letting out stress, right?

—Yes! It's a great way to work through it. And through feelings— Castaspella nodded. —In fact, after we thought my brother had died, I took over this kitchen too. And cooked all kinds of desserts for hours!

—Oh, really?— Catra asked, curious, joining the sorceress at the counter.

—Yes… It was a really dark moment for me, but cooking and feeding Glimmer all those desserts really helped me work though it all— she smiled.

—Oh, I see…— she nodded. —So… What do we do first?

—Alright. So, we start by cooking the meat with the sauce. I'll prepare the pan, you can mix these things for the sauce to your liking!— Castaspella proposed.

—Alright.

While the sorceress busied herself oiling a pan and placing it on the fire at medium heat, Catra tried all the things she had been given and mixed the different ingredients to end up with a consistent sauce for the meat.

—Great! That looks really well.

—Now, what?

—Now I'll get the minced meat on the pan, you'll pour the sauce, and I'll stir it a bit while it cooks— Castaspella explained. —Tell me, those ration bars you had at the Horde… Did they have any flavour at all?

—Nope… Just different textures according to the colour.

—And what did you drink?

—Err… Water? Kind of?

—What does "kind of" mean?

—It was something like water, but I think it was poluted originally? They had a filtering machine… I think. I can't recall that well. Most of that stuff was… strange anyways…

—That sounds awful, and I sure hope you'll enjoy better food and drink from now on— Castaspella lamented, focusing on the colour of the meat.

—Well, this is looking amazing already, so…

—I sure hope it will be to your liking— the sorceress smiled. —Now, we make a round space amidst the meat… Like this— she explained, moving everything to the edges and leaving a small pool in the middle. —We'll put some water here… And you can get the instant noodles ready— she told her.

—Alright, I'll open the bags.

—Good! Place them on the water and we'll count to fourty-five and turn the blocks of noodles around— Castaspella further explained.

—Okay?

—Just trust the book— she insisted, noticing Catra's disbelief.

—Sure, yeah!— the girl quickly nodded.

—Good, good… Now we count— the sorceress prompted her. While Catra began counting with her fingers each second that passed, Castaspella asked —I suppose no one in the Horde knows how to cook, then?

—Or what a kitchen is— Catra scoffed, trying not to lose count. —Fifteen, sixteen…

—Sounds like a nightmare— the sorceress commented.

—It was— she nodded, serious. —Twenty-two, twenty-three…

—I'm sorry you all had to be raised in such a place— Castaspella sighed.

Catra only swallowed hard and said nothing else.

Only kept on counting.

—Fourty, fourty-one, fourty-two…

—Fourty-three, fourty-four, and we turn them around!— the sorceress finished, using a pair of chopsticks to turn the barely wet blocks of noodles. —In a bit, this will be loose enough to mix it all together, and the water will evaporate. We can mix in the vegetables, and then it'll be ready to eat!

—It's smelling… so good— Catra had to admit. —My mouth feels all watery.

—Oh, that's wonderful— the sorceress smiled. —Hopefully you'll like this— she told her, beaming.

—How do I eat it, though? It's so hot, I don't think I can grab it with my hands…

—No, no! You… Oh dear…

—Yeah, I imagined— Catra sighed, looking down.

—I'll teach you how to use these, but if it's too dificult, we'll just go with a fork— Castaspella proposed. —Chopsticks can be tricky, so don't worry.

—Tha-thanks— the magicat shyly smiled.

—You're absolutely welcome— the sorceress replied.

—Should I get something to put this in?

—Yes! Find a pair of bowls, I'll start mixing everything with the meat and veggies.

—Right away— Catra nodded.

She could hear her stomach grumble, she was so hungry.

She was also a bit self-aware and blushed deeply, hoping the sorceress couldn't hear her stomach.

When she returned with the bowls, the noddles looked golden, tender; nothing like the bright yellow dry stuff she had first put in the pan.

—Alright! I'll serve the food— Castaspella told her, raising the pan with one hand and using the chopsticks with the other to expertly separate two portions.

—That looks so good. I had no idea food changed so much when cooking it…

—That's understandable. I reckon ration bars aren't exactly cooked.

—Nope…

—Well, congratulations on your first meal! I hope you enjoyed cooking!— Castaspella laughed. —Now comes the best part: eating it!

—Oh, right— Catra laughed too. —So, um, how do I use this?

—First, you take this chopstick with this pair of fingers, and the the other like this…— the sorceress began, showing her what to do. —Yes, that's it… Can I fix something?— she asked, before touching Catra's hand.

—Yeah.

—Hold it like this, as if you were pinching something between your fingertips.

—Oh, okay, that's more comfortable— she admitted. —And so I move it like this?

—Perfect!— Castaspella celebrated. —Try picking up some noddles.

—Alright…— she let out, managing to hold a bunch of noodles and some meat between the tips of the chopsticks. —This is tricky, yeah… But it's also fun!— she admitted, laughing. The moment she closed her eyes, half the noodles slipped between the chopsticks back into the bowl. —Oh, man!

—Try again— the sorceress exhorted her, laughing daintily.

—Alright, I'll eat it right away now…— she decided, attempting once more and immediately taking the noddles to her mouth. Her eyes opened wide as she munched on the food, which felt warm, savory, and soft. It was so unexpected… but at the same time, it tasted as good as it smelled. —This is so good!— she managed to say, making Castaspella laugh again.

—I'm so glad you're enjoying it…

—I-I can't even… Hmm, it's so good!

—And now you know how to make it!

—So I can cook this whenever!?

—You can— Castaspella smiled. —And you only need to increase the amount of ingredients for more servings— she explained. —Just in case you want to cook for your friends— she added, winking at her.

—That's… actually a good idea, yeah— Catra smiled, looking down at her bowl. —They've been really nice to me.

—Why wouldn't they?

—After all these years, I don't know if I deserve it…

—I'm no one to tell you whether you do or don't deserve it, but I think they believe so, or they wouldn't be giving you a chance, wouldn't you say?

—Well, yeah, but… I don't know.

—It's alright. You don't need to figure it out now— Castaspella assured her. —Maybe you just need some more cooking to think things over and come to a proper conclusion— she giggled. —But, in all honesty, just don't be too hard on yourself.

—I'll try… Thanks— Catra mumbled, as she continued to eat, shyly munching on the delicious food she had made.

She had made it, with her own hands.

With help, yes, but… she actually did it…

It suddenly downed on her, how different things had been lately. She could hardly believe it, but it was true. Everything was different, and better.

An strange sensation washed over her and she kept on eating in silence, reflecting.

Castaspella was right. Cooking did help her work through her feelings a bit.

Maybe she should do it more…

Humming to herself, Castaspella was once again invading Brightmoon's kitchen.

As Catra walked in, curious, she knocked on the table to call her attention.

—Who- Oh, Catra!— the sorceress beamed. —Good afternoon, how are you?

—All fine, thanks for asking— she smiled. —You?

—I'm quite happy today! Got so lucky at the market… What a coincidence to meet you here again.

—Nah, it's no coincidence. Sparkles- Uh, Glimmer, told me you were here and I wanted to say "hi".

—Aw, really? I'm so glad— Castaspella giggled. —So, I'll take it that you aren't hungry this time.

—It's a bit late for lunch right now…

—I know. I already had lunch. This is a little extra I'm making— she nodded, briefly glancing away from the red thing she was cutting.

—Uh… Can I… maybe help?— Catra offered, reaching for one of the red things in a pile next to the cutting table.

—Sure- Oh, wait, don't touch those with your hands alone.

—What? Why?

—I… don’t suppose you’ve ever seen chillies before, have you?

—Nope… Red things, that’s what these are to me. Is this some fruit? They are so small, don’t look very filling.

—Oh, trust me, these are not innocent. In fact, you shouldn’t touch them with your bare skin because they sting— Castaspella explained. —There should be some gloves in this kitchen…

—But you’re not using any.

—Oh, no, I’m using a spell!— she explained. —I could maybe cast it for you… if you’re alright with the touch of magic, that is.

Hmm… Was she?

And how did she know?

Yes, the only magic Catra could trust was Adora’s and Melog’s.

But, maybe…

—Yeah, go ahead— she accepted, nodding and offering her hands, palms up.

Carefully, Castaspella drew a sigil and a fresh sensation wrapped Catra’s hands.

That was… so gentle.

—Done. How does it feel?

—It-it’s actually quite nice— the magicat realized. —Thank you.

—Of course— the sorceress smiled. —Now you can help me— she added, beaming again.

It was kind of… heartwarming.

—So, what are you doing, exactly?— Catra decided to ask, focusing again on the here and now.

—Today I’m cutting this chillies to put them in oil and make it spicy, and then cleaning those other chillies to make a syrup!

—Wait, what? Ho-how does that work?

—Well, it’s actually pretty simple: for the oil, just cutting these in small slices is enough. Once they are all chopped, we’ll just put them in that bottle, fill it with oil, and leave it to rest.

—Alright? So… spicy oil. I guess it’s to add to salads?

—Exactly! Or anything that may taste better with oil; this one, being spicy, will add a little punch to the food, and I actually prefer it over adding salt— Castaspella explained.

—Okay, that's clear. Then… the syrup- Isn't that supposed to be sweet?

—Yes! The result is pretty much a spicy-sweet syrup— she laughed. —I don't know why, but I love it, specially the drinks I can make with it— she commented.

—Drinks!?

—Yeah, with or without alcohol, it's a really versatile syrup. Also, with the leftover chillies, which end up pretty much caramelized, you can make a snack that is just… divine— she sighed. —Some fresh cheese with a piece of those chillies, you have no idea the delight!

—I see— Catra laughed too, amused. —I don't think I can try that, though. Might be too much for me.

—Hmm, yeah, the chillies with cheese may be… You can always try a very small piece, but better don't risk it. It'd be safer to try something milder. Let me make you a drink with the syrup and you can try that— the sorceress offered.

—Sure— she smiled back. —Now I'm kinda excited— she admitted. —I should tell the guys about it— she smirked.

—Oh, you can absolutely tell your friends, invite them to taste the drinks… but please don't tell anyone else about this.

—Sure? Why, though?

—Well…— Castaspella began, pouting while looking away. —There may or may not have been a little issue with my brother… the day of his first date with Angella…— she began, making Catra hold back a laugh already. —I'm sure she liked him even more after that, but still, he made me promise not to do it again while he's around… And this is the first time I do it since he returned…

—Oh- Oh, damn, yeah, I see— Catra nodded. —Sure, I won't say anything.

—Much appreciated— the sorceress replied, noticeably relieved. The mention of Angella finally hit Catra just that moment, and her expression darkened for a second. Noticing as much, Castaspella decided to go on and change the subject. —Now! This should be enough chopped chillies, so let's put them on this bowl for later— she said, grabbing it to help Catra get the chillies inside. —Fantastic. Time to move onto the chillies for the syrup! It's not necessary, of course, but my preference is properly cleaning them beforehand. I take off the seeds, sometimes the inner veins if they are too big, and only then put them in the water with the sugar— she explained. —To be honest, the reason why I leave it all for the oil but not for the syrup is more related to how I like eating the caramelized chillies with cheese. In fact, the syrup will be less spicy this way, but it's a sacrifice I'm willing to make— she dramatically concluded.

Catra let out a hearty laugh, but didn't pay any less attention to how she had to clean the chillies.

—Alright. This looks good— she finally said, checking whether she had missed any seeds.

—It's perfect. Place it on the bowl over there.

They both cut and cleaned the remaining chillies quite quickly, and finally, it was time to put them to work.

—Do we wash the cutting table first, or…

—We can wash it after putting the syrup on the fire. It'll take time— the sorceress explained.

—Alright— Catra nodded.

—Let's start with that. Pass me the measuring cup, please— Castaspella requested, while fetching herself a small saucepan.

—Here.

—Alright, now, we'll first measure the sugar and then the water, so the sugar won't stick to the cup— she patiently explained, while Catra paid attention, unaware of her amazed expression. —It doesn't really matter what the measure says; as long as it's the same proportion, it will work. So we'll fill the cup, and put the sugar in the pot…— she began, doing as much while explaining. —And now the water, up to the same point the sugar was!— she concluded, pouring the water over the sugar. —Would you like to add the chillies?

—Su-sure— the magicat nodded, taking the bowl and emptying it on the saucepan.

—Now we take this to the stove, at medium heat, stir a bit to dissolve the sugar, and leave it for an hour.

—Oh, that's a lot of time— Catra noticed. —What do you do in the meantime?

—I usually just read something, since you shouldn't leave things on the fire unattended, but today there's so much to wash in the sink that I guess I'm busying myself with that— she replied, fetching a timer to set it for an hour. —You can always come back later, if you prefer.

—Nah, it's fine— the magicat assured her, waving a hand dismissively. —I can help with that too.

—Oh, of course!— Castaspella accepted, smiling cheerfully.

As the sorceress handled washing the dishes, Catra took care of drying them off and putting them away in their corresponding place.

—So, um… I've been meaning to ask- I-I was wondering, how… did you know I don't… trust magic that much?

—I had a feeling— Castaspella replied, without looking back. —If you're wondering, it's not obvious— she then clarified, now giving her a gentle smile.

—Well, your feeling was not wrong.

Sighing, the sorceress replied —You don't have to tell me if you don't want to, but I certainly hope you'll eventually regain that trust. After all, Etheria is now more magical than before.

—I've noticed. But, no, well, I-I actually got pretty comfortable with Melog's magic, and… and Adora's… But sorcery is different, I guess. And the magic of the planet itself is not… invasive.

—That makes sense— Castaspella nodded, once again looking down at the glass she was washing.

Catra then consider it for a moment and let out a deep sigh.

—It was- Since I was a child, the only magic I knew was… bad. Not only because they taught us that princesses and magic were "a dangerous thing", but also because- well, because magic was usually used on me as a punishment— she decided to reveal. —It was nothing like the magic I know now, and far from how gentle that spell for my hands felt.

The sorceress couldn't help but swallow hard as she felt a lump on her throat.

She imagined it was bad, but couldn't possibly understand how bad.

It made her feel such sorrow.

—Magic is supposed to be something… beautiful— she began. —The fact that you had to meet it's worst side, and since a young age, is simply horrendous— she expressed. —I don't know why I feel the need to apologize…

—No, no. You shouldn't— Catra quickly denied, while drying a plate. —You asked for permission and it absolutely didn't bother me. It did make me feel a bit… strange, in the sense that I couldn't believe it wasn't bad, but it was also something I needed. A reminder that magic is not just what I suffered— she assured the sorceress, putting the plate away. —I guess now I am calmer about interacting with sorcery in the future.

—I'm glad to hear that— Castaspella smiled, passing her the last glass, before drying her hands. She then checked the timer and saw it still had half an hour to go and sat on the table. —We did quite fast working together.

—Yeah— Catra chuckled. As she put away the last couple of things, she considered whether to touch another matter. —There's… something else I'd like to talk about, if you don't mind — she finally said, sitting on the table too.

—I imagined— the sorceress admitted, recalling that moment earlier when Catra's expression darkened. —I'm all ears.

—So you noticed, huh? That's why you changed subjects.

—Well, we did have to continue with the chillies— she pointed out, giggling.

—Yeah— Catra sighed, with a sad smile. —I'm just… I still feel a bit guilty, you know?

—It wasn't on purpose— Castaspella immediately answered. —I won't try to deny you caused it, but you didn't mean to. I want you to understand that, even if there was… malicious intent behind your actions, this specific thing you're blaming yourself for was something you didn't plan.

—I just can't understand why Sparkles forgave me so easily— Catra admitted, supporting her head with both hands, leaning over the table.

—Because resentment isn't… the right path— the sorceress uttered. —I blamed Angella for my brother's supposed death, and it lead to problems in my relationship with Glimmer too. I knew she didn't purposely send him to his death, but… I couldn't forgive that she caused it— she admitted. —Now I regret all the lost years with Glimmer, and the fact that Micah has to bear the pain of knowing how strained my relationship with his wife was.

—Oh…— Catra sighed, looking away. —Yeah, that's… I think I get it.

—Besides, the fact that you feel such regret is very important, and I'm sure it didn't escape Glimmer. I bet she appreciates it.

—We've talked about it a few times, and she says she may not forget what I did but also remembers what I did afterwards, like saving her from Horde Prime, even if it was actually to save Adora— she told the sorceress. —She says that she still wishes it hadn't happened, but she already made the mistake of blaming Adora for it, and doesn't want to fall into that again.

—Ah, yes… I heard about that— Castaspella nodded. —I think it's the right choice. It's a healthy approach, and again, you don't just pretend it never happened, or that you weren't to blame, or anything like that. But accepting the blame is not the same as blaming yourself to the point it tortures you.

Catra let out a chortle, half drowned in a sob she couldn't help, and closed her eyes.

She hadn't considered it that way.

She saw no difference between accepting the blame and blaming herself.

But maybe, there was…

—Yeah, I suppose you're right— she sniffed. —Thank you.

—It was nothing— Castaspella smiled. —I really enjoy these conversations while we cook- Oh, the oil! I forgot about it— she then realized, facepalming.

—Right! We never put the chillies in the bottle— Catra noticed.

—Come on, let's do that before the syrup is ready— she invited her.

After choosing an appropriate bottle, Castaspella gave Catra a spoon to carefully get the chopped chillies inside, and then little by little poured enough oil to fill the bottle.

—So now it needs time to take the flavour, right?

—Precisely.

—Cool.

—And we're just in time to turn off the heat and let the syrup cool down— the sorceress realized.

—Oh, yeah! I'll turn off the stove.

—Thank you— Castaspella smiled. —Now comes the most difficult part for me: waiting until it cools down… I can't eat the chillies until it does, so it properly absorbs the flavour.

The magicat couldn't help chuckling at that; the sorceress sounded so dramatic and her pout was simply hilarious.

—Well, at least this was all done without incidents— she pointed out. —But, I'll be curious. What happened with King Micah back then?

—Oh, right— Castaspella sighed. —I cut the chillies a bit rushedly and had to run afterwards, so I didn't wash the cutting table. I don't even remember what I had to do, but well, it happened… And I learnt afterwards that my dear brother didn't notice, placed his hand on the cutting board, and barely cleaned it with a towel; it soon started to itch, obviously, but by then he was already on his date!— she giggled. —Instead of telling her anything, he pretended nothing was happening, and apparently she took his hand at some point… and it also made her hand itch— she went on, unable to hold back a laugh.

—No way!— Catra exclaimed, cackling.

—Yes! And that's how I knew he had a date with her and not a "meeting" as he had called it — the sorceress revealed. —But, well, I still had to promise not to do that again. Not just leaving the cutting table filthy, but rather working with chillies at all if there was any chance Micah could go to the kitchen.

—That's a bit exaggerated.

—I said the same, but he was furious!

Both laughed again for a moment, imagining Micah red with shame in his date.

—I bet it wasn't so funny back then— Catra giggled.

—No, I did laugh a bit in his face, I must admit.

—Epic!— the magicat cackled. —Ah… alright. Thank you very much for this— she sighed. —I'll come back later to taste that drink after the syrup cools down, and I'll invite the guys…

—Of course. I'll leave it covered for a few hours and get back by nighttime. See you then!

Night fell sooner than expected, and the four friends soon found themselves in Brightmoon's kitchen.

Since Catra told them about Castaspella's invitation to taste some drinks with a syrup they had cooked together, they had been extremely excited.

They walked into the sorceress enjoying the caramelized chillies with slices of cheese. She looked overjoyed.

—Evening!— Glimmer said, calling her attention.

—Oh, you're here! Fantastic, we can begin— Castaspella celebrated. —Any of you have good tolerance to spice? You can try some of those chillies with cheese on the table— she offered, while getting everything she needed to mix the drinks.

—I could try a bit— Adora commented.

—Oh, I know what that is— Glimmer realized. —Take a tiny piece of chilli and a large one of cheese and see how you bear it— she recommended.

—Alright.

Castaspella returned to the table with a bunch of bottles, including one with a golden liquid Catra recognized as the syrup.

—Let's see. I'll make one first, and you can all taste it and see if you want one for yourselves — she proposed. Looking at Catra, she asked —Any preference?

—Surprise me— the magicat smirked.

—Gladly— Castaspella beamed.

While she worked on it, Glimmer gave Catra a look.

—Hey, I didn't know you got along so well with Auntie— she pointed out.

—I really like cooking with her, you know? It's… interesting.

—I'm glad— Glimmer smiled.

—Alright! First drink is ready!— Castaspella announced, passing the glass to Catra.

She had a small sip under everyone's attentive gaze, and then a more confident one, eyes widening.

—This is amazing!— she finally declared. —Please, you have to try it— she encouraged them, passing it to Glimmer next to her. —Ah, Adora, how was the chilli with cheese?

—It wasn't bad, it stung for a moment but the cheese calms it. It's curious the contrast between sweet and spicy, though— she replied.

—I'm glad you are enjoying my little chilli snacks— Castaspella giggled. —And the drink seems to be quite a success too— she noticed, smirking. —Anyone wants a glass for yourself?

—I do— Catra nodded.

—Me too— Glimmer requested, while Bow tried it.

—Oh, wow. Adora, try this— he immediately told her. —And I want one too. I don't know what it has, but it's amazing.

—Wow. Wow! Ca-can I keep the glass?

—Don't you want a full one?— the sorceress suggested.

—Oh, no, this is enough.

—Of course, keep it, it's yours— Castaspella giggled, finishing the new glasses she was preparing. —There we go!

—I can imagine what this includes, but it's still hard to believe it has spicy syrup— Glimmer commented, as they all took their glasses.

—Right!? It's so mild but still adds a lot to the flavour— Catra agreed.

—It makes me so happy to know you like it so much— the sorceress admitted, finally enjoying a drink of her own.

—Thank you for inviting us to taste this— Bow smiled.

—Oh! Why don't we all have dinner together!? I can invite Dad!

—That'd be cool— Catra nodded. —But… let's not tell him what the drink has— she giggled.

—Why not?— Glimmer asked, raising a brow.

Exchanging a glance with Castaspella, the magicat and the sorceress began laughing without replying.

Chapter End Notes

Alright! That was all!!

I swear, the drinks with spicy syrup are SO GOOD!!
I usually make it just with sparkling water to drink during the day, as much as I want, but it can be done with a little extra, which I sometimes do too XD
It can also be adjusted to tastes, can include some lemon too, fruits, even syrups of other stuff!

Oh, and the cheese with the caramelized chillies is truly the best thing ever, I promise! (But as said in the fic, don't try it if you're not that tolerant to spice… And if you do, seriously, a good bunch of fresh cheese, a creamy one, not a hard/salty one)

Alright!
See you! (maybe here again!)

End Notes

So, I might end up adding more chapters eventually…
Stay tuned! :D
