Collision Course

by Mazen

Summary

Hordak finally sees Entrapta in battle. But he never planned what he would do when that happened.

In a world where Entrapta was saved from Beast Island sooner than in canon.

Notes

Entrapta runs from Hordak at one point and while it isn't a typical thing for her to do, she's been traumatized by Beast Island where it was much better to flee than be devoured.

Hordak

He couldn't believe it.

She was here. She was finally here.

And it was a knife to his decaying heart, cementing the fact that she had betrayed him, that she now fought on the princesses' side exactly as Catra had told him. His limbs trembled, a hand unconsciously finding its way to the crystal at his throat.

It had all been a lie.

He stood too long and stared into the clearing where she was working on one of his robots she'd commandeered. The sudden disappearance of the bot on his tracker and the lack of response when he sent a message to its hub gave him suspicion of sabotage.

And he was right.

She was here, sabotaging the machine he'd made on his own without her help. It was a symbol of how little he needed her and she was ruining it, like she'd come into his life and ruined it, replacing piece by piece of his existence with her presence, and making him dependent on her. She made him want to not be alone.

An involuntary growl from his chest alerted her of his presence. He silently thanked himself for the good decision to wear a cape today, something to make him appear more powerful when he in reality felt like he was breaking. Her whole body turned towards him while her hair kept working on the bot as if it was safe to do; she'd never really understood those situations when she was in true danger and this was such a situation.

Their eyes met for the first time since they'd been in his sanctum. He remembered too vividly how she'd persuaded him to keep working on the portal with her until it was perfect, something so out of character to say for her; she didn't care about perfection in her machines, nor in him if he was to believe her words.

She'd made him think that she wanted him to stay. And he would have. For her.

What a fool he'd been.

The sting of her betrayal struck him once more, a fresh wound that wouldn't seem to heal. And as he looked into her eyes that widened with recognition, he was filled with rage at how helpless her sheer presence made him feel.

He'd wanted to face her in battle, show her how powerful he'd become, but never once had he imagined what he would do when standing face to face with her. The logical option was to fight her as he did when he encountered the other princesses. But he hesitated.

"Hordak!" Her voice slightly breathless with surprise. Had the other princesses not warned her that he was on the battlefields these days? Her eyes sparked for a moment with joy, a look that had always made him warm inside. Now it just burned.

"How. Dare. You!" He shouted, finally finding the ability to move forward, stalking right up to her until he could stare her down. "Get your hair out of my robot! You have no right!" He tried to ignore the rasp of his voice. He was not aching inside; he was fine.

He grabbed her bicep and pulled her away from the bot. The feeling of her small arm in his overly large hand caused a jolt through him and he quickly let go of her to avoid more physical contact. She fell backwards, stumbling over a tree root sticking out of the ground, and if it wasn't for her hair, she would've injured herself. Guilt flickered inside him, but he pushed it down.

"You have some nerve showing your face here!" He hissed, flexing his claws with restraint. He wanted to destroy something, yet he couldn't touch her again.

With the help of her hair, she bounced back to her feet, then lifted herself to reach his height. “I have as much of a right to be here as you! You can’t throw me away this time!”

Her words didn’t quite make sense, but he was too overcome with a feeling of inferiority. The damned prehensile hair he’d once adored and admired now took away the only thing in his favor: his towering size. He couldn’t bear it.

He reached for a branch on the ground and hurled it underneath her body, making her yelp. The branch made an impact with her hair and swept it away from under her; she nearly hit the ground, but he caught her by the waist and threw her small body over his shoulder.

She was a real prisoner now and it would stay that way. He wouldn’t be caught up in her brilliant mind and beautiful eyes this time. There were still ways to use her intelligence without allowing her to work on the robots herself.

He didn’t get far with her. His focus was limited to getting her to his ship, but the feeling of her body against his shoulder and the hard breathing from her chest loud in his sensitive ear made him lose focus. As he walked under a tree, her hair wrapped around a branch and pulled her from his hold, his reflexes not fast enough to catch her.

After a less than elegant loop around the branch, she landed several meters from him, panting. “I didn’t know you despised me that much,” she stuttered, her eyes wet with unshed tears. Her pigtails formed a pair of hands that fiddled in front of her in a familiar gesture of nervousness. Had she not understood what she’d meant to him? How much her betrayal would hurt him?

He felt a sense of helplessness wash over him, the feeling that he was powerless against her, and he didn’t know how to handle it. All he knew was that he couldn’t let her go again.

He lunged for her, arms ready to grab her tiny frame. The arm cannon wasn't made to be used on her; he wanted her alive, uninjured. But her small body jumped out of the way. To his surprise, she ran from him. He'd never imagined Entrapta would be the type to run away and yet, he watched as she fled into the woods, her hair shifting into long legs that outmatched even Hordak's and within seconds he'd lost sight of her.

Once more, he was alone. She'd run from him, with good reason, and he acutely felt the overwhelming sense of loss he'd gotten so used to. The emptiness. The knowledge that she'd never wanted him. He knew why, but suddenly realized that he needed her to say it. Maybe then he could move on.

Pushing the emotions down that held him back, he followed her trail through the forest. He wasn't stealthy and every animal in his way ran from his path in fear of the monster he was. It wasn't hard to track her though; it was as if she didn't even try to keep him away.

Her tracks led him to a cave, one of those that bears often used. He hesitated at the entrance for a moment, sniffing the fresh scents in there, but there was no trace of bears currently occupying it. The idea that his chase of her made her go into a bear's cave to get mauled made his chest tight and bile rose in his throat.

No, she should be safe. Just not from him.

It didn't take him long to find her with his red eyes lighting up the dark cave and his sense of smell leading him. She was foolishly trying to hide in an indent of the cave wall, her tape recorder in a tendril of hair. He grabbed the straps of her coveralls at her back and pulled her from her little hideout, placing her to stand before him, looking at him with trepidation. It should've made him feel powerful, how she meekly stood with wide, worried eyes, but all he felt was self-loathing.

She did this to him! It was her fault and she needed to know how she'd broken him.

He took hold of her wrists, subconsciously mindful of her hands, and lifted her arms over her head, pinning her against the cavern wall. His other hand grabbed her hair and twisted it around his arm to hold it in place. This was where he wanted her, obliged to listen and to tell him the truth. Her face was flushed, giving her olive skin an enticing golden glow, and she breathed heavily. Their eyes met for a moment and the strange dilation of her pupils took his breath away.

"Why did you do it?" He asked, desperate for an answer. "Was it all a ruse from the beginning?"

She didn't answer, didn't struggle in his arms. He leaned forward, trapping her between his body and the wall. The sudden closeness made his breath hitch, as he was unprepared for the feeling of her soft curves against his hard frame. Even through his armor, he could feel her body's shapes and the warmth that emanated from it. Her hair around his arm seemed to tug him closer, matching the spark of excitement and anticipation in her eyes.

There was a distinct fragrance in the air, making his mind hazy, and it seemed to be stemming from her. Was it fear? Whatever it was, he had to know. He buried his nose in her neck, allowing himself a sniff of that enthralling aroma. His ear was right next to her mouth and every deep breath tickled and teased him. A heady sensation settled in his lower stomach.

Without noticing, he'd let her hair slip out of his grip. His arm cannon fell to the ground, having been detached by her hair, but he didn't care. A shiver ran through him as it began to wrap around his limbs and his body, such an intimate embrace that he hadn't felt from anyone but her. That he'd never wanted before…

He lifted his hand to place it loosely around her throat, gently but with firm grip. "Hordak," she whispered against his long ear, her voice hoarse, although not from lack of oxygen. The way she spoke his name always felt so sincere, so endearing. In her voice the name he'd taken for himself was beautiful.

His lips dragged down her neck, tracing the tendons there, and landing on her pulse. She gasped as he planted his open mouth there and licked the spot that throbbed with blood rushing beneath her skin. She gasped into his ear, her hair squeezing his limbs and pulling him closer to her.

The taste of her skin was intoxicating and he couldn't tear himself away from licking and sucking everything he could reach. It wasn't enough for him when the whole side of her neck was covered with his salvia; he needed more.

He let go from her wrists that clumsily fell down to wrap around his neck. His freed hand turned her head the other way to allow him access to the other side of her neck where he continued the worship of her skin with his lips and tongue, consuming whatever he could.

Whimpers and gasps left her, spurring him on. His mouth followed the line of her neck up to her jaw where instinct carried him to her lips. The first press of his thin lips against hers was clumsy and one-sided, but she was quick to respond to the next, meeting his urgency with an eager ferocity as they collided in a rush of passion.

Her lips were the sweetest thing he'd ever tasted and he felt physically unable to stop his onslaught that was led on instinct alone. When her lips parted with a gasp, he felt compelled to plunge his tongue into the cavern of her mouth, seeking out more of her sweetness, as much of her he could reach. She moaned against him and let her tongue tentatively massage his, extracting a needy sound from him.

The hand at her throat moved up to cradle the back of her head, holding her to him as he kissed her assertively and desperately wishing this would keep her there forever. One of her hands came up to cup his cheek, scorching him with its foreign intimate touch, even through the coarse fabric of her glove. He leaned into her hand, taking whatever she would give him.

His free hand traveled up and down her back, feeling the slope of her body that he'd admired so often. Every part of her was so soft, so small in comparison to him. Then he went lower, grasping the full flesh of her behind. The thick coveralls she wore hindered him from feeling her properly and he refused to let more come in his way; the coveralls tore easily as he ran his talons through them, giving way to the dusky skin beneath.

It wasn't until he grabbed the incredibly soft, newly revealed flesh and crushed her abdomen to his own that he became aware of the bonfire gathered in his loins. She felt it too; her legs lifted to wrap around his waist while invading tendrils of hair pushed his cape and his tabard away to allow better access. She ground the apex of her thighs against him, their sexes only separated by their undergarments.

Their mouths still met and parted between moans of pleasure as he held her against the cavern wall, her body clinging to his. He felt the sudden need to see her as she was overcome by passion fueled by him. His hands took hold of her shapely thighs and carried her to the deepest part of the cave where he put her down and removed his cape to spread as a blanket on the ground. She deserved a downy bed, but he could wait no longer; if she settled for him, she'd have to know that he had very little to offer her and least of all patience.

He stepped back and gave her the chance to leave, to run from the monster. To his immense surprise and relief, she didn't. She lowered herself to sit on the makeshift bed, her hair pulling him towards her until he stood in front of her, tall above her small form. Her eyes drifted to the shape of his arousal that stood out, then bit her lower lip in curiosity. He knew what she was thinking.

She was magnificent - a wonder. If she left him again, he would break; his hearts would fall apart as his body would've by now if she hadn’t given him new armor. She made him whole in every sense of the word.

He looked down into her eyes, those eyes he dreamed about every night. They were warm, sparkling and held an intelligent glint that he hadn’t seen in anyone else, not even his creator. She looked at him like he mattered.

Then why had she left him? If she’d wanted to leave the Horde, he would’ve followed her. Somewhere inside he knew that the conquest of Etheria would mean nothing to him without her by his side.

Something inside him wanted to punish her, his anger at her and the world rising rapidly. He reached for his hard shaft, pulling his undergarments aside to free it, knowing fully how he could punish her. Her eyes lit up in eagerness as he held out his cock in front of her, but he didn’t give her a chance to explore. The moment her lips parted, he plunged it deep into her mouth, enjoying the surprised mumble as the vibration traveled along his length.

Leaving her no time to adjust, his hand reached out to cradle the back of her head which allowed him to thrust in and out of her warm mouth while his other hand held her chin. He didn’t go gently, not even when he hit the back of her throat and he felt her gag around him. It was a powerful sense of pleasure that washed over him as he watched his cock fuck her mouth, silencing her in a way he’d never thought of before.

He admitted though that he’d always enjoyed her voice and had never once truly wished to silence her. She with her ramblings, inventions and explosions filled a void in the sanctum that he hadn’t wanted until she was gone.

Didn’t any of their time together matter? Had it meant nothing to her? Didn’t she care at all?

The words had already left his mouth when he realized he’d said the last part out loud. In a blink of an eye his cock was pulled from her mouth and her hair had wrapped around his entire body, holding him in place as she rose to sit on her hair in front of him. Her eyes were sad, but held a determination he'd seen in her many times.

His eyes followed her hands as they took turns removing her gloves, leaving her hands bare for him for the first time. He was mesmerized by the pale skin on their dorsal sides, littered by random scars, and how they held obvious strength in spite of their small size.

One hand reached out to touch the crystal at his throat and he knew that she could easily end his life right there by removing that power source she'd installed, leaving him completely vulnerable to be defeated by a single pull of her hair. He met the magenta orbs of her eyes and he was shocked to see tears there.

She quickly averted her gaze, tears falling down her cheeks. "You think I didn't care?" A finger tapped against the crystal as she let up a sob between her words. "This, I gave this to you. It says 'LUVD', you heartless brute!"

He was speechless. The First Ones crystal she'd given him, the scribbling on it… He'd thought she'd just detailed the specifics of the power within, but instead… She'd secretly told him that he was loved.

He had never been loved before.

When he finally found the words for what he felt for her, he didn't even get the chance to speak them. Her uncovered hands grabbed his face and pulled him down to crush her mouth against his, startling him with the force of her kiss. Her teeth bit at his thin lower lip until his lips were parted enough to allow her tongue entrance.

The sensation of her soft hands on his skin broke his stupor and he responded to her, giving himself over to her love. They both moaned when their tongues entangled, fighting for dominance in a way Hordak had never imagined was possible.

Her hair released him and his hands instantly began to roam her body, claws slicing through any clothes in their way. She made the most lustful sound when his hand slipped between them and cupped one of her full breasts, a finger grazing a peaked nipple.

He didn't waste a moment to kneel in front of her as his mouth kissed and licked down her throat and clavicle until he reached her lush globes of sensitive flesh, his hands kneading them tenderly while his mouth pulled the hard bud of her other nipple into his mouth. She gasped and moaned above him as his tongue circled around it, his canines gently scraping over it.

Her hands found his hair, one burying itself in his blue crest while the other moved down to stroke his ear. It was too intense, too stimulating and intimate in a way he hadn't felt before, and he whimpered her name before switching to the other breast.

A tendril of hair grabbed one of his hands and pulled it downwards, over her silken stomach, towards the arousing scent that emanated from her center. He knew enough of Etherian humanoid anatomy to know what to expect, yet he was completely unprepared for the sensation of the warm, velvety wetness that greeted his hand as he cupped her sex. Nor did he understand how she would allow him to touch her in such a private place.

As a single of his fingers slid between her nether lips, she let out a sound he would never forget; it caused a flash of perfect, almost painful pleasure to strike through his entire being, beckoning him to continue.

As if he could stop. He wanted nothing more than to please her, pushing his own pulsating need down, to give her what she so deserved.

He pulled her down to lie on his cape on the ground as a delicacy spread out before him. His large hands grabbed hold of her hips and parted her legs as he lowered his mouth to her center and licked a long line through her slit, growling at the taste of her liquid desire.

She cried out at the contact, her voice echoing through the cave, and he wanted more of that sound and of her taste. He began to devour her fully, holding her hips steady, as he kissed and licked the pink flesh. Her voice rose in pitch as he found a tiny, hard lump that crowned her sex and began to suckle it, enjoying the way she attempted to grind herself into his mouth.

He had not paid attention to his own arousal, but when he entered her with a finger and carefully fucked her with it, he became aware of his own hips thrusting into the ground below him in the same rhythm as his finger moved within her. The thought of feeling her silky inner walls pull at his throbbing shaft stimulated him as much as his thrusting.

When he added another finger and curled both inside her, the cry of his name sent him reeling and he couldn't wait any longer. He needed to be inside her, needed to feel her core grip his cock and hear her voice as he fucked her.

He rose from his position at her sex and lowered himself till his body covered hers. Their lips met once more, her hands lovingly cradling his face, while her hair began to slide down his undergarments; she wanted this as much as he did.

The fact that she didn't attempt to remove his armor, nor the tabard beneath, made his hearts clench. She understood his insecurities. He could definitely perform this act without his armor, but he was ashamed of his body and wasn't ready to be that vulnerable. They each had their imperfections and she found his to be beautiful, as he did with hers.

He gazed fondly up at her mask that he hadn't attempted to remove in respect of her boundaries and for the first time he noticed that it wasn't the one she usually wore. This resembled a large bug and didn't even look to be more of metal. She caught sight of his focus and removed her hands from his face. "My other mask was… broken. I had to make a new one." He saw a tendril of hair begin to fiddle with the straps and knew she was prepared to lower it.

"I see. Why that design though?" He didn't know why he needed to ask. The interruption in their passionate tryst was unwanted, yet he somehow felt he should know.

"It worked as a camouflage. Turns out that Beast Island is a very literal description." She averted her eyes and bit her lip.

He grabbed her chin and pulled her face towards his again, a little too hard, forcing eye contact. "Why were you on Beast Island?!" He growled, cursing the princesses for allowing her to go to such a dangerous place. She could've been killed.

"You sent me there!" She shouted, her palms pushing his chest away from her. But he was stronger. He wasn't going anywhere until she'd explained the nonsense he was hearing. "I finished the portal for you and you sent me away because you no longer had any use for me!" She was crying now, small fists pounding on his chest.

He suddenly understood. She'd been sent to Beast Island, not betrayed him. Someone else had and he knew who. But right now it didn't matter. Only she mattered. She was here with him, alive by some miracle, and she thought that he had sent her away when the truth was that being without her had torn him apart.

"Entrapta! It wasn't me! I didn't send you away, I never would have. I thought you had betrayed me, but I see now that it was a lie." He put his hands on her cheeks and looked at her desperately, willing her to believe him. "You are everything to me, Entrapta! The portal, the war, going back to Prime… None of it matters if I can just have you. I love you!"

A sob left her, but he swallowed it as his mouth covered hers. She gripped him with her arms, legs and hair, pulling him closer as if she never wanted to let him go. He hoped she wouldn't.

"I love you," she breathed between kisses and it was the sweetest words he'd ever heard. He knew he was crying as well, but he didn't care anymore because she was here and had never left him and loved him. He'd never imagined this could ever happen.

Their kisses turned deeper and demanding while desperate hands roamed to feel the other's body. He kissed down her throat to suck on that delicate spot where her pulse drummed beneath her skin, marking her with his lips. One day he would mark her permanently, he swore, one day where they both felt less vulnerable.

"Entrapta, I have never known such... your brilliance, your beauty. I want you, oh lord, I want to be inside you." Words spilled from him, veneration of her and the desires he had held back for so long. She whimpered incoherent words into his ear, but her own desire was clear as she shifted beneath him, aligning their sexes.

She was dripping for him, her entrance soaked with arousal. It called to him on some primal plane and all he could feel was the urge to answer that call. The mindless need to feel her, to take her, was overpowering. He lifted his head and locked eyes with her to make sure she was with him. She was.

He pushed into her wet heat, burying his cock to the hilt inside her warm, welcoming core and howled a cry of sheer pleasure, engulfed completely by the woman he loved. She possessed him now - body and mind - her rippling, slick walls clinging onto his length.

She was trembling, her eyes wet with tears, but her hips urged him to move. Slowly, he pulled out of her, finding that the movements came natural to him, before he plunged into her once more. This time her hips lifted to receive him and she let out a fierce moan as he slid in, her legs coming up to wrap around his waist.

He'd never imagined it could be anything like this, their beings colliding in a passionate dance of limbs and lips that they had been destined to take part in from the moment each of their hearts began to beat. All that existed around them faded away as he moved within her and heard her whimper his name.

"Entrapta, Entrapta, you're...ah! Mine!" His thrusts became harder, deeper, more erratic as he strode to possess her as fully she had him. He crushed her body to his, sucking and licking wherever he could reach, and revelled in the sounds she made.

Her hair invaded his armor like tentacles probing beneath his skin to cover every part of him, swallowing him whole, making them as one. And he wanted to consume her as she consumed him, so thirsty he was for her. He wanted to drown in her drenched cunt and have her choke on his cock like the serpent of ouroboros devouring itself infinitely.

She took him higher as her wet walls began to spasm around his swelling cock. Her bare hands pulled his mouth to the decadent place where her neck met her shoulder and her voice in his ear begged him "bite me" and he was helpless to resist her plea.

He sank his teeth into her skin - marking her as his alone - and she screamed his name in pleasure and pain, her short nails digging into his cheeks while her cunt milked his cock as she convulsed until he was pounding his seed deep into her - "mine, mine, mine" - drowning in fiery waves of absolute rapture unlike any he'd felt before.

The tide of his climax slowly receded, leaving him a quivering mess of pleasure. His mouth, still carrying specks of her blood, peppered her with kisses which left her face covered in marks that looked like lipstick. She giggled in that adorable silly, slightly crazed way he loved so much and covered his mouth with her own.

They’d somehow found each other against all odds and he swore that he would eliminate every being that dared to take her from him again.

He would come to keep that promise.

Entrapta

She'd seen him from afar, his head held high as his powerful arm cannon obliviated everything within range. Her mask instantly came down, not to hide herself, but to zoom in on the wicked smile on his face as he wielded the weapon with incredible expertise. They had worked on the schematics together, but it seemed that he'd completed it to perfection without her help.

It was much larger than she'd expected and with greater firepower, its vigorous shooting range astonishing. The long hard steel fitted him as though it was an extension of his armor, making him look virile and brazen as he flaunted his dominance over the battlefield. The mighty cannon displayed Hordak's potency for all of Etheria to see and Entrapta most of all.

It was undeniable evidence that she had been expendable and he'd been right to send her to Beast Island. He obviously had no use for her anymore and she suspected that he was glad to be rid of her awkward, clumsy behavior, her constant talking and the frequent explosions.

The urge to run up to him on the battlefield and question him about the components for the arm cannon or his new regenerating drones caused her to jitter as she restrained herself from doing just that. He would be angry to see her. She'd been sent to the island to die after all, not even worthy of an explanation or a swift death. It would be stupid to confront and while Entrapta was impulsive at times, she wasn’t stupid.

She wanted to go back to the Crypto Castle since it was a matter of time before the princesses got tired of her as well, but the Horde had taken over Dryl when she’d joined them. The kingdom was thriving without her; there was no need for her and she was worried about facing Hordak if she tried to take back her territory.

Her only option was to make herself as useful as possible for the princesses and not get in their way or talk to them too much, especially not about the science behind the weapons they encouraged her to build.

She missed talking to Hordak. It was one of the things she missed the most about the Fright Zone because he'd seemed to listen and even respond at times, awing her with his infinite knowledge. Sometimes she'd wondered if he enjoyed it as much as her.

But her interpretation of his interest in her had been wrong. The memories of her best scientific and social interactions in her life were now tainted, something she actually found worse than the time she’d spent fighting for her life on Beast Island. She was trying to put it behind her, figuratively speaking, but she always found herself in some situation to remind her of her lost life.

The one that bothered her on a daily basis occurred when she was working on an experiment, collecting data or assembling a bot. She'd gotten used to having a lab partner with her and while she was still able to talk all she wanted into her recorder, but the complete lack of response bothered her more than it had before she came to the Fright Zone. If only she had Emily to talk to…

The solution to her problem came to her like a bolt of lightning: she could just send a message to Emily and the bot would come. She could respond in a conversation and was always reliable; Entrapta had made her so. All she needed was a direct line to the Horde's communication system to hack into and encode a message to Emily.

She looked down at the field where the impressive drones made by Hordak himself wreaked havoc. They were likely controlled by the panel she could spot on the side of his arm cannon. If she captured one of those, she would easily be able to hack into their system.

The other princesses had told her to stay away from the fighting because she didn't have combat experience nor magic to make up for that. They didn't know how skilled she'd become on Beast Island after fighting off the scary animals that lured between the whispering vines; she'd even learned the necessity of fleeing when she'd estimated a high risk of losing a battle.

She was only on the battlefield now to observe how horrible Hordak had become according to the princesses who hoped she would turn against him and build weapons for them to stop the Horde. They probably hadn't expected her to admire his vigor and power instead. She didn't need any moral push to design robots or anything like that. But being placed at the observation post alone while they fought made it very easy for her to sneak away.

Getting a drone away from the action without walking directly into Hordak's or the princesses' proximity proved to be more difficult than first calculated, but after a while she found one straying at the outskirts of the nearby forest. When it caught sight of her, it eagerly followed her through the woods and though it had the improved aiming system she'd once installed in all the bots, it wasn't hard to avoid its laser when she could swing from tree to tree with her hair.

When she reached a clearing, she backtracked without making the bot aware of it and just as it stumbled past the last tree before entering the direct sunlight, a tendril of her hair slid down, flapped the back panel open and turned off the power module. The poor thing never even knew what happened. She felt a little bad about her cold-hearted action, but it wouldn't take long before she could turn it on again, no harm done.

She jumped down from the tree and pulled the bot all the way into the clearing which provided better lighting and more room to work. It was still ridiculously simple to hack into the Horde's system; it was something Hordak had never been invested in because he'd thought that no one had the expertise to do it until he met her. The fact that he hadn't updated the system was a clear sign that he hadn't expected her to survive on Beast Island.

It took her a moment to find Emily's location in the Fright Zone. She hadn't been much active and Entrapta wondered if Emily actually missed her - that there truly was someone out there who missed her - and it gave her a warm feeling in her chest, even though she might have accidentally programmed her to miss her maker.

Just as she was about to type out a code to alert Emily of her current home in Bright Moon and directives to come to her, the unmistakable sound of an Unetherian growl tore through the peaceful clearing. She could recognize the deep timbre anywhere.

She turned around immediately, her eyes widening as she took in the sight before her: Hordak stood tall and proud across the clearing, looking powerful in his outstanding armor and that spectacular cape with his legs apart in a dominating position that made the slits of his tabard flaunt those strong thighs he kept on display. His gaze burned with such consuming intent that it took her breath away and she couldn't hold in the elation she felt as she spoke his name.

All that pain she'd felt after he sent her away disappeared momentarily, a great burden lifting from her heart, and she wanted nothing more but to run up to him and bury her face in his chest, reliving the sense of affection she'd once experienced with him.

His shout pulled her swiftly out of the false reality. "How dare you?" The harsh chill in his voice was enough to remind her that he'd never felt any affection towards her, a message made clearer as he reached her in three strides and grabbed her arm to pull her away from the bot. "Get your hair out of my robot! You have no right!" His words were raw with fury. Hordak had never been the type to physically engage with someone, but that appeared to have changed and the way he manhandled her informed her of how little she meant to him. He was so far from the man who'd once taken her wrist - conscious of her hypersensitive hands - to save her from the exploding portal experiment.

She was so shocked that she backed away as soon as he let her arm go and stumbled over a root sticking out of the ground, but she barely took notice of it, relying on her hair to keep her from falling. "You have some nerve showing your face here!" He hissed, looming over her small form, only allowing her mind to focus on the anger in his eyes, anger directed at her. It reminded her of their last interaction where he'd yelled at her, refusing her assistance with his armor. It had hurt her, but it wasn't until she'd found herself on Beast Island that she knew it had been the last straw for him. As the portal had been completed, he'd seen the opportunity to get rid of her immediately without granting her an explanation.

With the memory of how he'd discarded her like a scrap of bent metal, her hair raised her high up to face him. He would not break her. "I have as much of a right to be here as you! You can't throw me away this time!" She heard her voice shake with emotion, but she didn't back down as he sneered at her words.

In a blink of an eye he grabbed a branch and lunged it at her; had she been standing on the ground, he would've killed her instantly, but he only managed to knock her hair away from under her. She wasn't quick enough to react, too shook by his brutality, and he caught her before she had the ground, throwing her over his shoulder as though she was a bag of trash he was planning to dispose of.

She wanted to fight back, to hit and kick him, to scream at him for having used her until she wasn't worth the trouble anymore. Yet she let him carry her, knowing she needed to catch him off guard. So she allowed herself to enjoy a few moments of contact as he walked towards the battlefield. His presence was intoxicating, so fierce and authoritative with a brilliant mind that held knowledge beyond her imagination. She'd always felt safe with him and even now as he held her captive in his sturdy grip, she felt an odd sense of protection. Clearly, her survival instinct had been damaged during her stay at Beast Island.

It was more a reflex than a conscious action when her hair wrapped around the nearest branch above them and pulled her out of his grip. He stared at her in surprise when she landed a few meters from him. She was dizzy and felt unstable on her feet and in her mind where she was trying to make sense of the feelings she had for him which she'd once thought he returned. "I didn't know you despised me that much." Her vision stabilized and she locked eyes with him, begging him to explain.

His red gaze pierced her with predatory intensity, his ears flat against his head and they were the only thing to warn her as they lifted before he pounced on her, his hefty arms reaching out to grab her again. She tried to scream, but nothing came out; instead she ran.

Suddenly, it wasn't Hordak she ran from, but a dangerous animal that wanted to devour her. The forest around her transformed into the obscure jungle on Beast Island where she'd spent so many days that she'd lost all resolve to keep track of the time. Her legs weren't fast enough - they never were - and so she let her hair carry her, hoping to find a place of refuge in this haunting forest, a sanctum where no harm could reach her. Had she only stayed in the sanctum, he wouldn't have sent her away, he wouldn't have…

No. No, she had come back. She had survived Beast Island until the princesses rescued her. They came for her, not King Micah who was there, not someone else sent to that terrible place. It was her and her scientific mind they had rescued, all that he had rejected. She was no longer on Beast Island.

The legs of her hair had by instinct taken her to safety in a cave, as far into the back as possible. She crawled into a comforting little nook, the small space giving a respite to her overwhelmed senses. It had always been difficult for her to function in large, open areas for extended periods of time and she instinctively sought out the relief of tight spaces.

"You came back from Beast Island. The princesses came for you. You weren't forgotten. You came back from Beast Island. The prince-" The recorder replayed the words she'd recorded to remind herself of the past week's events because she often found her thoughts straying back to that place. But she turned off the recorder when she heard metallic footsteps echo through the cavern.

She knew those footsteps well, even when they strode over the dirt on the ground of the cave, and knew immediately that she was in another kind of danger now. It was one without manipulating whispers and beasts waiting for a moment of weakness, but filled with heartache and deception. With each step that took Hordak closer to her, she felt her breathing increase and her stomach clench with anxious anticipation. She didn't want him to find her and yet, she hoped he would. In spite of everything, she couldn't stop loving him and seeing him had brought it all back to her.

She only saw a flash of his red glowing eyes before a large, clawed hand grabbed the straps on her overalls and pulled her out of her sanctuary to stand before him as an innocent awaiting trial. He looked down at her, cold and indifferent to her resigned state. Let him kill her or put her on another transport vessel to Beast Island, as long as he did it; at least that would force him to acknowledge her significance and perhaps even convince her to figuratively dispel him from her heart.

He must've expected her to fight back, so when she didn't, he took both of her wrists in one hand and pushed her up against the chilled stone wall while wrapping her hair around the fascinating cannon on his other arm. On their own tendrils of hair began to find the clasps to remove it, but he didn't notice. His armored body pressed her further against the wall, effectively rendering her completely immobile and at his mercy. His armor was hard on her frail frame, but the crystal gleaming dimly just above her eyes was an inanimate witness to her role in creating the armor which held him together. He would never be able to deny her that triumph.

She should've been petrified as the vampiric warlord's fangs and eyes flashed dangerously, the color of blood lighting up the dark, as he regarded her intensely. But all she felt was the sense of thrill, entirely enraptured by the magnificent being that towered over her and deemed her worthy of his flaming gaze. Every inch of her body felt trapped, almost guarded; no one but him decided her fate and it was exhilarating.

"Why did you do it? Was it all a ruse from the beginning?" His question was barely more than a whisper and she struggled to make sense of the words as he pulled her body upwards to face him. He stepped forward, his knees pushing her hanging legs apart to make room for him. It made her acutely aware of the throbbing wetness in her core only centimeters from his muscular thighs.

Her lungs felt devoid of oxygen when he leaned down to her neck and inhaled sharply, making her shiver as everything inside her clenched. She felt delirious to the point where she couldn't even remember anything that had happened up to this moment. Not even the loud clonk of his arm cannon falling on the ground registered in her mind. All that mattered was him and as a massive paw encircled her throat, his name was the only thing on her lips.

It came as a shock to her system when his warm breath was replaced with a fevered mouth trailing over her skin, outlining a path of passion that threatened to consume her. His red-glowing tongue was soft and greedy, each lick of wet heat echoing inside her. As his firm lips closed over her pulsepoint and sucked, she fought for air and attempted to grab at him, but it wasn't until he moved to the other side of her neck that he released her wrists from his iron grip.

She clung to him as he tasted her skin, helpless against his aggressive adoration. Nothing had ever felt so profound and carnal as this. Only when his lips found purchase on her own did she respond as her mind caught up with her physical desire. She kissed him ardently, parting her lips to pour all the fear, frustration and yearning she'd felt this past year into the kiss and let him understand the bitter tang he'd left her with after pushing her away. His tongue retaliated as it dove into her mouth and dueled with her own.

His hands were all over her, amplifying the pulsating ache in her loins, and when he palmed her backside, she saw an opportunity to swing her legs over his hips while his talons cut through her overalls. Their combined efforts allowed her greater friction as her hair brushed his cape and skirt aside to rub her aching sex against him. He cursed into her mouth, pressing his cock further against her center and ensuring her that he was hard and eager for her, groaning her name as she kept grinding against that extensive shaft he'd kept hidden beneath his garments.

She didn't take much notice of it when he pulled her away from the wall and carried her into the back of the cave, but she almost cried out as he removed her from his body. He couldn't leave her like this, recharging her need for him and making her desperate for him before sending her away. If she had to fight him to make him see her worth, she would.

It proved to be unnecessary; he swept off his cape with a graceful swish and laid it out to soften the ground. His intentions were clear and she didn't hesitate to offer herself willingly. Her hair encouraged him to come closer as she sat down on her knees. He stood before her like a giant, mighty and full of lust, but while his posture was imposing and confident, his eyes were soft and pleading. She eyed the substantial bulge covered by dark fabric, wondering in which way he would take her.

When she locked eyes with him again, she saw a strange transformation as his seemingly unchanging eyes grew dark and cold. Worry blossomed in her - what had she done wrong? - but it was forgotten when he freed his heavy length from the cloth that had restricted it. His shaft was large and alluring, a darker tint of blue than the surrounding skin with ridges lining the front all the way up to the tapered tip. It curved elegantly upward in an objectively aesthetically pleasing manner, reaching the place where his navel would be if he'd had one.

She straightened her back to face it fully, keen to take it between her lips, but as she opened her mouth to let her tongue have a first taste, he pushed his hips forward and rammed the enormous shaft into her mouth. It hit the back of her throat and she felt the urge to gag for a brief second until he pulled out. There was no warning when he drove it inside again, holding her head steady to keep her in place as he used her mouth to pleasure himself.

She felt bewildered, her thoughts a haze, but she enjoyed the way he employed her to his own satisfaction. Let him be her master, her lord, as long as he would have her by his side. Her panties were soaked through with her own arousal, proving how gratifying she felt to be handled this roughly. She took as much of him inside as she could and he moaned above her, so ardently that, though she was on her knees being treated as a mere hole, she felt powerful.

He murmured something and she tried to concentrate to catch the meaning of his words. But what she heard were not words of veneration or contentment; it was something that caused the rage she kept so deeply buried to flare up. "-meant nothing. You never cared at all."

In an instant her hair had pulled him away from her and restrained him. She wiped saliva from her mouth, trying to compose herself which seemed nearly impossible. He claimed that she'd never cared when she'd done nothing but care for him and the time they'd spent together. He was the one who had thrown her away, had deemed her expendable without even having the decency to tell it to her face.

Despite all of this, she cared for him so much - she loved him even now - that she was ready to see past his obvious exploitation of her skills and affection, and take those tiny crumbs of himself that he offered her. She was a fool for loving him.

The hair that wasn't keeping him restrained formed a chair and lifted her from the cape on the ground until she was face to face with him. She stared at him, unshaken by the shocked look on his face as she took her gloves off one by one. He would understand how much she'd cared, even if it still meant nothing to him.

Bare to him in more ways that she'd ever imagined, she let the tips of her fingers glide over the crystal that held him together. She'd traced the inscription many times after she'd written it, not sure that she would ever give him the crystal. But when he'd revealed his affliction to her and allowed her to improve his life-sustaining armor, she'd reached for that particular crystal to supply the required power.

His eyes now turned fearful, undoubtedly dreading that she would take it from him. She looked away in dismay, her vision blurred by tears. Did he truly think she was that callous? It felt as though her heart broke in half and she briefly calculated the risk of her dying of heartbreak after what she'd been through, finding the data too depressing to explore further.

"You think I didn't care?" She pressed her index finger against the crystal's smooth surface. "This! I gave this to you. It says 'LUVD', you heartless brute!" She tore her hand away, leaving the crystal where it belonged in spite of everything. Tears streamed down her cheeks as she prepared herself for his degradation of her silly feelings.

But it never came. When she looked at him again, his eyes were watering and staring at her with something akin to awe; maybe even a sliver of affection. Did he actually appreciate what she'd revealed to him?

His mouth curved in a small, grateful smile and her heart, severely aching mere moments ago, suddenly felt as if it was flapping inside her chest with joy. She flew at him, grabbing his face to kiss him again, so happy that he accepted her love. It might not be returned, but it was more than she could've hoped for. The sound of his moan set her on fire and her hands found purchase in the soft fluff of his hair, touching one of the many places she'd wanted to feel for so long.

He struggled against her hair which reluctantly freed his arms; his wide-reaching hands wasted no time to grab hold of her body and pull her closer, easily tearing through her remaining clothes. Those textured palms slid over her bare skin, exploring every rise and dip of her body. She longed to do the same, but knew it wouldn't be welcome. Even if he trusted her enough to see him, he despised his body and would not want to be vulnerable. Instead she settled for letting her hair explore every exposed part of his body while her hands cradled his head and raked through his hair, making him groan in response.

A needy whimper left her as he freed her swollen breasts and examined them with great interest. He seemed to like them and kneeled down before her to marvel at them as he squeezed them with his large hands. It didn't take more than a few light grazes over her nipples before he gathered how sensitive they were and utilized his mouth to stimulate the hard peaks, rolling his long tongue around one while pitching the other, ministrations that sent waves of lust rushing directly to her core which had begun to feel unbearably empty.

She grew impatient as he touched her everywhere but the one place she needed him the most and took it upon herself to guide his hand down between her legs. He pressed his palm against her mound, finally addressing that thrumming ache. He looked at her with wide, questioning eyes as one of his thick fingers slid into her dripping folds. It felt so sublime that she threw her head back and cried out.

Before she knew it, he'd lowered her to the ground covered by his soft cape and spread her legs wide to settle between them, his eyes wild and predatory. He gave her no warning in advance as he dove down to drag that papillae-covered tongue through her slit. She squealed at the sudden contact, her hips thrusting up against his face to make him continue. He chuckled and held her in place as he lapped up her wetness.

It didn't take him long to find her clit and stimulate it just right which sent her spiralling towards orgasm faster than she'd ever experienced. The muscles inside her contracted and she became desperately aware of the insufferable emptiness in her cunt. Just as she was about to beg for him to fill her, she felt a hand slide up her inner thigh until it reached her entrance. For a brief moment she feared that his talons might tear her delicate flesh, but the worry left her as a long digit slipped into her slick opening, stretching her in the most delicious manner.

She wrapped her legs around his broad shoulders as much as physically possible to keep him in place as he gently fucked her with his finger and adored her clit with his exceptional tongue. Her pleasure nearly peaked when he added another finger, the fullness so exquisite that her insides fluttered with ecstasy, but the impending rapture was abruptly ripped away from her as he moved away from his position between her legs. It felt like a punishment and she was close to tears until he crawled up her body, aligning them best as he could, and positioned himself between her legs. He wanted to take her in the most intimate way possible and she dragged his lips to hers in a tender kiss to show her desire for it.

His eyes followed her hair as it peeled away the restraining fabric covering his erection and she watched as his gaze slowly trailed up her naked body, his expression one of intense lust as he ate her up and swallowed her whole with his devouring eyes. She was eager to move things along, but halted her efforts to do so when she spotted his sudden interest in the mask on top of her head and realized that he'd deduced it was new. "My other mask was… broken. I had to make a new one." She mumbled uncomfortably, reluctant to elaborate. Surely, this wasn't the time to remind her of that place.

He nodded in a contemplating manner. "I see. Why that design though?" She gritted her teeth. Wasn't it very obvious that it resembled a bug? Did he want her to tell the tale of how she'd killed a huge monstrous bug and taken its facial exo-skeleton to use to both weld and hide herself among the monsters?

"It worked as a camouflage. Turns out that Beast Island is a very literal description." This wasn't working out. His weight on her, even as he kept most of it off her, was becoming suffocating and if she didn't get out of this conversation, she would cry. She didn't want any of that, she just wanted to go back to being desired by him and forget all the pain.

He grabbed her jaw between two fingers and forced her to look at him, his eyes burning with a terrifying rage. "Why were you on Beast Island?" He roared at her, irrationally angry by something he already knew. Such a cruel man he was! Her chest bubbled over with fury and emotional hurt, her arms and legs flailing with excess energy from her inner struggle until she aimed it at him with a scream.

"You sent me there! I finished the portal for you and you sent me away because you no longer had any use for me!" She kicked and hit him, a hopeless battle against this mammoth on top of her who seemed to barely feel any of it and wasn't moving in spite of her fight to get free. She was wailing, but he did nothing to comfort her to explain, to let her escape; he just stared at her with an indiscernible look.

Then he grabbed her wrists and pushed them to each side before cradling her head that had been shaking back and forth; it pulled her out of the tantrum. He stared at her with determination. "Entrapta! It wasn't me! I didn't send you away, I never would have. I thought you had betrayed me, but I see now that it was a lie." She closed her eyes, too scared to believe his words. He had sent her away, he had ordered Catra to- hadn't he? She sobbed when she felt his thumbs wipe away the tears under her eyes. "You are everything to me, Entrapta! The portal, the war, going back to Prime… None of it matters if I can just have you." She was trembling, overcome by conflicting feelings roaming free inside her body. But the loud roaring in her ears quieted immediately as he spoke again. "I love you!"

She stared into the orbs of his large eyes spilling over with sincerity, tears, love and regret. Had their time apart been damaging to him too? Had he missed her like she'd missed him?

It was all so overwhelming and she didn't know what to do, except cry to let out the feelings inside. He took the chaos away from her, calming her disheveled nerves, as he kissed her deeply until nothing mattered but him. She clung to him, declaring her love for him, and he whimpered against her lips in response.

Their need for each other in body and spirit built into a frenzy. Her desire returned triple fold and she ran her hands over him wherever she could while her hair sought out the places beneath his armor that she couldn't reach. He broke away from her mouth to groan, then dove down to her pulsepoint, his fangs scraping her skin as though he was about to tear her open before he began to suck and lick at the tender spot while whispering words of utter devotion.

"Please," she moaned, not knowing what she wanted to say, only knowing that she had to feel all of him. He could fill that emptiness inside her, complete her, and she cried out with relief when he finally pushed his way into her quivering core.

The unyielding softness of his shaft forcing its way inside flooded her with breathtaking sensations of pain and pleasure until he had filled her to the brink. She clawed at him, struck by the staggering experience of being united with the one she loved. He lifted his head which had been buried in the crook of her neck and looked at her with such love and worship, it made her heart beat faster.

They began to move together as the gears of a starting engine, slowly rotating faster and building up energy with every thrust. The movement and the endeavor to find the right rhythm were as intimate as the act itself, but it came to them naturally. It didn't take long before she was feeling the beginnings of an intense orgasm with the ridges on his shaft providing internal stimulation unlike any she'd ever imagined.

She called out for him as her crisis grew nearer and he responded with all-consuming kisses and adoring words declaring that she was his. She embraced the entirety of him with her arms, legs and hair while he started to ram into her - as lost to the pleasure as her - pulling her towards the universe somewhere out there. Every fibre of her being declared him to be hers and swore to never let him go. No one would tear them from each other again; they belonged to one another and everyone needed to see it.

She led his mouth to her neck. "Bite me." It was a command and he complied without hesitation just as her orgasm hit her. Her walls contracted with vehement pleasure that surged through her and mixed with the pain from his penetrating fangs, making her scream so loudly it echoed through the cavern. He pounded violently into her spasming core, his shaft swelling inside her while he suckled her blood; all of it prolonging the other-wordly sense of fulfilment.

His mouth left her neck and with each frantic thrust, he claimed her - "mine, mine, mine" - as he came, pushing ever deeper inside her and spurting his fluid so wildly that she felt its force as it coated her inner walls.

Her body trembled afterwards, fully spent after the life-altering experience. Hordak, however, seemed full of renewed energy and was almost giddy, placing small kisses everywhere on her skin with an odd smile on his face. She might even call it… happy? It was extremely contagious.

“I love you so much, Entrapta.” He snuggled into the crook of her neck and licked the sore wound where he’d bitten her. “I never knew how much you meant to me before you disappeared, but I’ll never disregard my affections for you again. You are to be the Lady of the Fright Zone and rule Etheria with me.”

“Oh! Then you can be the Prince Consort of Dryl!" She imagined him in the official royal robes and how dashing he would look. They even matched his cape and it would be easy to make them compatible with his armor, although she would need to hire someone to adjust the robes to Hordak's tall stature and broad shoulders. "It would make your claim to Etherian territory legit according to a treaty signed by every kingdom 347 years ago."

"Am I not to be king of your kingdom?" he questioned, not offended, but puzzled. He probably wasn't aware that only a male regent could be called king and that he couldn't rule without her since he wasn't born as royalty.

She was about to explain the particularities when they heard commotion outside the cave that required their immediate attention.

Hordak didn't give her much chance to even contemplate getting dressed; not that her clothes were intact anyway. In one smooth movement he rose from the comfortable position above her naked body and lifted her into his arms, along with his cape which he wrapped around her. She barely managed to reach for her gloves with her hair and his arm cannon forgotten on the floor before he strode out of there, towards the noise outside.

Entrapta didn't know what to expect nor did she bother to think about it; she would know soon enough. But she felt how tense Hordak was, his lips pulled back into a sneer and his arms covering her protectively.

While she'd never pictured herself as a damsel in distress, she was willing to admit that she enjoyed her current position very much and there had been lonely nights on Beast Island where she'd longed for this scenario. She nuzzled her face into the steel covering Hordak's chest.

The light outside nearly blinded her after getting used to the darkness of the cave with Hordak's eyes and mouth as her only light. It took her several moments to see anything at all, even in the shadows beneath the forest trees, but she heard the beeping immediately.

"Oh, it's only Emily!" She jumped out of Hordak's arms, ignoring his attempt to protest and running over to greet her dear friend, hugging her the best she could. Luckily, her hair was long enough to cover the bot completely and it did.

"Entrapta, there might be others nearby!" Hordak was by them in a second, draping his cape over her to hide her body. She wasn't a modest person and was fairly certain that Emily would alert her if there was anyone else here, but she let him swaddle her in the soft cape.

Emily beeped at her, questioning where her clothes were. "My clothes were… ruined." Entrapta giggled, looking up at the warlord above her head who was busy scouting for enemies. Emily's pink light flickered at her in question; that kind of knowledge wasn't programmed into her. "Do you still have all my stuff?" Her hair flipped open the second panel to the right of Emily's light to reveal the storage space in there.

This had caught Hordak's full attention. He bent down to watch with curiosity as she began to pull out her spare clothes which were in a big pile among her books, a few Horde standard batteries, First Ones' crystals, snacks without an expiration date and a lot of other stuff. She came across two bottles of Grape Fizz. "Ooh, I haven't had this in ages." She popped the lid on one and drank half its contents, then offered some to Hordak who just looked at the bottle with slight disgust.

She shrugged and turned back to rummaging around the storage for her underwear; she'd definitely left some there, but it was a mess in there and though she could pretend it was because of Emily's movements, the truth was that she had probably just thrown her things in there. This was back when they were going to the Northern Reach.

"Eureka!" She yelled when she finally found them. Pushing the cape off her shoulders and handing it to Hordak - who looked around them in panic as he tried to shield her body - she began dressing in the admittedly dusty clothes.

“How much do you have in there?” He muttered, trying and failing to discreetly watch her dress. She found herself enjoying his eyes on her and slowed the process of dragging her tube top over her head, allowing him to watch her breasts a little longer before she covered them. It pleased her to see a large protrusion in his skirt, especially as she knew he wasn’t wearing an undergarment under that skirt. Such easy access! But Emily was there now; they should wait.

“Oh, just some essentials,” she answered, her hair beginning to search for a pair of boots while she pulled on her gloves. “Tools, clothes, books I still haven’t read, old recordings, food, hair ties...” She closed the panel gently and patted Emily. “Will you get my boots in there?” She pointed to the cave they’d come out of and the bot beeped proudly as she hobbled into the cave. “Apparently no boots though,” she shrugged with a grin, looking up at Hordak.

His eyes were wide and held an emotion she couldn’t quite place - like most people’s emotions. “Old recordings?” he asked hoarsely, quickly looking away. “I thought that… that they had been destroyed.”

She placed a tendril of hair on his shoulder, but reached for his hand as well with her own. “You were looking for my recordings? For what?” It shouldn’t surprise her really. Most of their time had been focused on the portal, time they could’ve used to improve the Horde’s weaponry. He had heard some of her ideas; she had recorded plenty of them.

“I… I told my Force Captains that it was for the data, but…” He didn’t look at her, but covered her hand in his own with his other hand. “I just wanted to hear your voice.” Entrapta’s heart felt like it expanded, metaphorical butterflies fluttering in her belly. Oh, he had really missed her.

She lifted herself with her hair until they were the same height and kissed him on the lips. He reciprocated without hesitation, wrapping his arms around her to embrace her fully. Her hands, although gloved again, slipped around his neck and into his blue hair. Oh, she could get used to this. His lips were addictive and she would gladly spend the rest of her life in a lab with him, living on nothing but science and love. And tiny food.

Just when she began to consider pulling him into the cave again and continuing what they'd started, Emily emerged with her boots, beeping loudly in triumph. Apparently, it had been pretty difficult to find the left one. Entrapta reluctantly let go of Hordak who let her sink down to the ground to put on the boots.

"So… what happens now?" She asked him as she tightened the velcro on her boots - she'd never really learned how to tie shoelaces - and pulled her pants legs down over them. Barely had she finished before she was swept into his embrace again.

"I destroy Force Captain Catra and then I will make you my wife." He kissed her sweetly on her nose. "That is, if you will still have me." His eyes were nearly impossible to read without pupils, but she could sense the nervosity in his voice. After learning the truth - that he hadn't sent her to Beast Island, that he returned her feelings for him - she felt fairly confident in her ability to understand his subtle social cues.

Her hair snaked over his shoulders and down his back while she planted her gloved hands on his cheeks, smiling at him. "There's nothing I want more, Hordak." Only a small smile graced his lips, but the joy in his eyes was easy to read, even for her.

She kissed him chastely before jumping down to Emily and pressing the button to record. "Now, there's a lot of things I want to do as well because I haven't been in a real lab for a year and I'm itching for some proper equipment. The princesses didn't have much! But there are a few things I'm gonna need. I left a backpack at the observation post nearby. So while I get that, you can destroy Catra and then we'll meet up-"

"No," he said firmly, reaching for her wrist before he stopped. She noted that he was quick to get used to casual touching when it involved romance, but apparently not other situations. "I'm not letting you out of my sight. Not when I've finally…" He trailed off and looked away. His eyes glimmered with unshed tears. How often had he cried after she disappeared? Was it as much as her?

She took his hand again while her hair pulled at his shoulder until he looked at her. "Hey… I promise I'll be back in a jiffy. Besides, I really don't want to face Catra again." Her hair fiddled with her mask. Usually, she didn't find the need to hide around Hordak, but thinking about Catra - now that she knew the truth - pained her. She'd thought Catra was her friend, but it was just another proof that she wasn't cut out for friendship.

Hordak seemed to understand. He bent down on one knee, lowering himself to her level. She'd never seen him do that before and felt herself blush. "You never have to lay eyes on her again. I will see to that." He pulled at her sleeve to uncover her wrist and kiss it, sending shivers through her. "You will return to me?"

"I will." She leaned in to kiss him and he hugged her small body, pulling her as close as possible. When he broke the kiss, she was breathless and regretting that they didn't have any privacy here now that Emily had come. But they would be together soon enough. "I love you, Hordak." She rested her forehead against his, aware of the hitch in his breath as she spoke those words.

"I love you too, Entrapta." He replied in a raspy voice. Her cheeks hurt from how much she was smiling. His love made her feel invincible.

They parted reluctantly, Entrapta waving him goodbye as she sat on top of Emily who trotted happily away. He watched them as they disappeared between the trees, but Entrapta managed to catch a glimpse of him as he dramatically turned with a whoosh of his cape and walked away like a predator stalking a new prey. She wouldn't want to be Catra right now.

Catra was satisfied.

The Alliance was losing. Her strategies were leading the Horde to victory and soon they would take over Brightmoon. From then on it would be a matter of months before all of Etheria had been conquered.

She looked over the battlefield, trying to locate Adora. Ah yes, there she was, fighting the many drones that came at her. Hordak had done well in improving them; he'd never needed Entrapta at all. Catra's decision to send the little scientist to Beast Island, even as impulsive as it was, had been a clever one. They would never have gotten so far if Hordak had stayed holed up in his Sanctum with Entrapta.

Catra had planned to join the fight. Of course, Hordak already had, eager to prove his worth to Entrapta whom he thought was with the Princesses. But Catra waited for Adora. She had very little reason to fight any Etherians or the other Princesses; it was Adora she wanted. To prove to her how much better she was without her.

Her eyes were locked on Adora, so much that her keen feline senses didn't even take notice of the person coming up behind her. It wasn't until she heard a nasal voice speak her name for the first time in nearly a year that she tore her gaze away from Adora and turned to the figure behind her. "Oh, hi there, Catra!"

"No…" It couldn't be. How could she be here? She'd been banished to Beast Island! No one could survive that place. "You can't be here. Not now. You'll ruin everything." There was no doubt in Catra's mind that Hordak would kill her on the spot if he knew the truth.

Entrapta's face fell. "Oh. You're not happy to see me." She raised a hand to her mask and slammed it down over her face, reaching for one of her ponytails to fiddle with. "I thought we were friends.

You said so.” Catra thought about the best way to dispose of the nerdy Princess without anyone noticing. She might scream and with Entrapta’s distinct voice, that would draw attention to them, even from the battlefield.

A hand lifted Entrapta’s mask again; she cocked her head to the side in a scrutinizing way and began to walk closer to Catra. Too close. “I know I’m bad with people. But I think you are too.” Catra’s heart beated a little faster at her words. “People have hurt you too. You said you were abandoned like I was. By Adora. And Scorpia. Both of them fled from you.”

“They left because they were weak.” Her hands tightened into fists, ready to strike. Entrapta scrunched her nose, contemplating. She seemed so different, like she was seeing right through Catra. Her eyes looked up and down Catra’s trembling frame as she began to circle her.

“I don’t know... You know as well as I do that people mistreat you or cast you away if you aren’t good enough. Hasn’t that happened to you?” Catra pictured them all before her: Adora, Scorpia, Shadow Weaver, even Hordak. “Friendship are hard for me. I talk too much about science and forget about others’ feelings, but I’m lucky that they still want to be my friends. They even came to Beast Island to save me!” Entrapta leaned in behind Catra and continued. “You though? There is no way anyone would do that for you. And who can blame them? Why should they come for you when you are the one who drives them away?” Entrapta walked around her to face her again, waiting for a response.

But Catra didn’t know what to say. She wasn’t like Entrapta who people avoided because she was so weird. People liked Catra, admired her… Didn’t they? She thought about Kyle’s words: `We used to be your friends. Why are you treating us like this?’ Was she the one who drove them away? All of them?

She looked at Entrapta, fighting against tears. “Why are you saying these things?” A little smirk appeared on Entrapta’s lips; Catra pushed the sadness aside and found her anger instead.

“Why should I even care about what you say? You’re just a little Princess who knows nothing about being a leader. I’m better than you. I will lead the Horde to victory.”

“Will you?” Entrapta stepped closer again, a little too close. She didn’t have a sense of personal space, but Catra was not understanding of that right now. The Princess’ eyes widened almost manically and she smiled like she’d discovered a new First Ones’ crystal. “I think you will be dead the moment Hordak hears what happened to me. Imagine that: killed by the last alley you had in the world.”

At this, Catra finally snapped. She pushed the hurtfulness of Entrapta’s words deep inside her and replaced it with rage. White, blinding rage that had been burning inside her for years and years, built by Shadow Weaver and fueled by Adora's betrayal. She would make sure that she got what she wanted. Hordak would never know the truth if she killed Entrapta first.

She lunged at Entrapta, pushing her to the ground and landing on top of the sturdy, small body. Her fists delivered blow after blow, aiming at the places that would damage the most. The Princess started to laugh at her between each punch, that annoying cackle infuriating her even more. How dare she mock her?

It wasn’t just Entrapta she was hitting, but everyone who had ever hurt her. Her mind was falling apart and the only thing she could do was lash out because it was all she’d ever done. The bloodied face beneath her fists changed to Adora’s, then Scorpia’s, Hordak’s, Shadow Weaver’s before turning back into Entrapta’s. She was so consumed by her rage that she thought she was imagining it.

She didn’t even notice it when the color of Entrapta's skin changed from olive brown to a dusty green nor hear how the loud laughter in her ears switched into another’s voice.

Only when she heard the roar of her name and the familiar sound of the arm cannon charging, did she stop and turn around to see Hordak's furious face and the cannon pointed directly at her.

Hordak wandered through the battlefield to find the deceitful little cat. Now that Entrapta wasn't with him, the wrath inside him grew with each step he took. She'd pretended to be his friend, made him trust her, and all while Entrapta was suffering on that terrible island. It was only because of Entrapta's brilliance that she'd survived. He could've lost her, she could've been…

He forced the tears in his eyes away. Entrapta was safe with Emily. Soon, they would be reunited and nothing would keep them apart again. But to ensure that, he had to dispose of the feline.

It took him longer than expected to find her. He'd presumed that she was fighting like everyone else, but instead she was hiding like a little coward at the observation post. Her demise would have to be quick; his search for her had delayed him and he wanted her dead or at least incapacitated and out of sight before Entrapta returned.

He was striding towards the observation post when he heard the She-Ra call out his name behind him. "Lord Hordak! I challenge you to battle!" On any other day he would be glad to fight the magical Princess, but he had no time for her now; Catra was his main target. He ignored the She-Ra and continued up the hill where they'd placed their post among scattered trees, even though he heard her follow him.

Barely had he reached the top when he saw something that made his blood boil: two figures were fighting on the ground not twenty meters from him. He recognized the one with the upper hand as Catra, but it was the purple hair from the other person that enraged him to the point of madness.

Entrapta had as promised quickly gotten her things and had come looking for him. Instead she'd fallen right into Catra's hands. Catra who was beating her, trying to do what not even Beast Island could do.

"Catra!" He loaded the arm cannon at full capacity as he ran towards them, his ears hearing nothing but the charging laser of his cannon and seeing only the two figures on the ground. The unscrupulous wretch turned to look at him with frightened eyes, blood splattered over her clothes and her face.

Entrapta's blood.

He aimed the cannon at her head and fired.

A sword hit the cannon so hard that his arm was pushed downwards, the laser shooting into the ground right before the cannon shattered into pieces, leaving no trace of it on his arm except the straps. He looked to his right where the She-Ra was standing with her sword raised, heaving for breath. But she wasn't looking at him. Her eyes were on Catra. "Run, Catra!"

Whether the nasty cat followed the command or moved on her own account, she removed herself from Entrapta on the ground. Hordak was next to his beloved in a second, kneeling in front of the hurt woman he loved, and grabbed a tendril of hair in his hand. He reached out to touch her face...

But her hair was different. It was limp and lifeless, not curling around his hand or even pulling away. He looked down at the hair in his hand, watching as it turned from a lush purple into blonde.

That's when he finally heard the laughter, the condescending laughter that had been in the background all along. And when he looked down at Entrapta, it wasn't the golden brown skin beneath the spilled blood nor was the mouth pink and soft, the warm lips he'd kissed no more than an hour ago; the skin was green and scaly, the mouth leering with pointy teeth. The golden eyes blinked with horizontal eyelids.

Horror struck him like lightning. He scrambled backwards, falling to the ground. The imposter stared at him with a bemused look, but their figure was drowned in water as his vision filled burning hot tears.

Had- had it not been Entrapta in the cave? Had the shapeshifter played the role of the woman he loved, had deceived him to-? No, no! He turned and threw himself forward, digging his talons into the soft earth, as he dry-heaved between shallow breaths.

Was Entrapta truly dead then? Was he so easily fooled, so desperate to see her that he had believed Double Trouble's disguise? But her hair had entangled itself around his limbs… Did shapeshifters have the ability to copy that? And she had felt so real in his arms, she had known things that no one--

He howled up at the sky, his body trembling with fury, sorrow, pain, disgust and... lost love. There was nothing for him anymore. He could not handle this pain inside him, it was too much. She-Ra… she was here, she could end it. He would- he would beg her…

Suddenly, familiar vines of soft hair glided over his body, anchoring him and bringing him back to reality. He thought for a moment that it was the shapeshifter and clawed at the hair, but stopped when a gloved hand touched his cheek. "Hordak, it's okay. I'm here." He gripped the hand and held it firmly against his cheek as he raised his eyes to look at the person before him.

It was Entrapta. It could be no one else.

He let out a shaky breath, finally letting the tears run down his cheeks, as he gazed into her beautiful, kind eyes. Then he saw the bite mark on her neck, the one he made which no one else could've known about until now. "Entrapta…" he whispered, reaching for her body and tugging her to him until she stumbled into his lab with a small, surprised yelp. Her hair embraced him while she ran a hand through his hair, her other hand still cupping his cheek. "It is you." He breathed.

“It’s me. I’m here.” She kissed his forehead, but it wasn’t enough - it was never enough - and he lifted his face to align their mouths. His lips were wet with tears, but she didn’t seem to care, kissing him with all her being until she had to come up for breath. He buried his face in her neck and kept his arms around her, breathing her in.

Slowly, he calmed down and, to his dismay, became aware of their surroundings. He looked up to see the bot called Emily standing with its laser ready to fire at Catra and the She-Ra now in her natural form - Adora. They were watching him and Entrapta with stunned expressions. Even the shapeshifter who had risen from the ground and backed away appeared to be speechless. He could hear shouts from the Rebellion coming closer.

He rose, lending a hand to help Entrapta up, and kissed her hand when she was on her feet. “I have a declaration that you may not agree with, but I need you to let me say it. Is that acceptable?” She nodded, much more understanding than he could’ve ever hoped for.

He held a tendril of her hair to keep her close as he walked over to Adora who pushed Catra behind her to shield her. He stared down at the small traitor, then at Adora. “I do not care what you do with her. I do not care about the war. It is over. But know this: if I ever lay eyes on that Machiavellian vermin again, I will kill her. I will rip her head from her body and crush her skull with my bare hands. And if she comes near Entrapta or anyone I care about, I will do it so slowly that she will feel everything. Am I clear?”

Adora’s eyes widened and she nodded profusely. “Good. This bot Emily,” he petted the robot affectionately and it beeped in delight, “will follow you to make sure that you treat the prisoner as she deserves. You will allow the bot to follow you at all times until I or Entrapta change her orders. Do you accept this?”

“Yes, Lord Hordak, we- we will treat Catra as eh… I will make sure that she is punished. And I think Scorpia knows Emily too, so…” She saluted instead of ending the sentence and quickly turned to push Catra down the hill, away from his sight. They passed some other princesses and exchanged a few hasty words which caused them all to retreat.

“I hope we can still be friends!” Entrapta yelled at them and Adora turned to smile kindly and signaled with her thumb that it was an agreement before disappearing down the hill. He, too, hoped that they could be friends. He knew Entrapta wanted friends, although he didn’t understand why.

Hordak turned to Double Trouble who was wiping blood away from their face with their fingers, then licking those fingers. They looked up at him with intrigue when he walked closer. “You will never take another form near me or mine. If you do, I will tear that smirking mouth off your face.” Their reaction was subtle, but he saw the fear in their eyes.

“As you wish, my Lord.” They purred, bowing overdramatically. “I will be at your service if you need me.” They raised their hand and moved their fingers as though waving with each individual digit before turning to walk away in an almost slithering fashion. Hordak shuddered, slightly overwhelmed by the unease he felt around the shapeshifter.

“Aw, I wanted to talk to them!” Entrapta whined, her ponytails fizzing with frustration. “Imagine the data we could have if we studied them. Aaaargh, I know, I know. Biology isn’t my expertise, but I could learn! I've already been practicing.” Hordak walked over and engulfed her with his much larger body which made her hair settle and pull him closer instead.

“You’ll get your chance, I promise.” He said, meaning every word. The shapeshifter appeared to be willing to do anything if it paid well or had entertainment value.

“Oh! Since they’re reptilian, I wonder if they’re like lizards where their tails regrow when you cut them off!” Entrapta continued. “I found these lizard-like creatures on Beast Island that could regrow every limb on their body. It made vivisections much easier because it took a lot for them to die.” He tensed when she mentioned Beast Island. It reminded him of his failure to protect her and his lack of trust in her. If he had questioned Catra’s words, Entrapta would never have stepped foot on the island.

“Entrapta,” he pulled back from their embrace to look at her, though he felt so ashamed that he wanted to look away almost immediately, “I want to apologize. You, of all people, were the one who least deserved to be sent to Beast Island. I failed to keep you safe and trust that you would never betray me. The pain of being without you was horrible, but the thought of losing y-” A tendril of hair covered his mouth.

“Hey, I’m here, I’m okay.” She smiled and lifted herself to match his height. “I’m like those lizards: very hard to kill.” A hand took his hand and attempted to entwine their fingers which wasn’t successful due to her bulky glove and his much larger hand. She giggled a little. “And you’re hard to kill too. Horde Prime sent you away to die and you’re still alive decades later in another dimension.”

“Hmm.” He grumbled. “I am just bad at following orders.” It wasn’t something he was proud of, but when Entrapta laughed, he couldn’t help but smile a little. She leaned forward to kiss his cheek, her arms wrapping around his neck. His hands found her hips, feeling the strong muscles beneath her overalls. He was amazed at how natural it already felt to touch her, despite the fact that none of them were used to casual touching.

“Sooooo, no more war?”

“No.” He said firmly, but with a small shrug. It wasn’t something he’d thought much about, but it felt right. “Prime has not come yet as he should. Perhaps he cannot pass through dimensions or he might not care about me. Either way I will be too busy to fight the princesses anymore.”

“Oh.” Entrapta’s shoulders fell, her expression almost disappointed. He knew how much she loved to build weapons.

“Busy with what?”

He slid an arm under her knees, making her yelp in surprise, and pulled her into a so-called ‘princess carry’ which was very fitting for his tiny beloved. “I will be assisting my lovely lab partner in all her endeavours, whether it is opening a stable portal, vivisecting a shapeshifter or even bringing plumbing to all of Etheria.” No matter how tedious the last bit sounded.

She squealed and jumped from his hold to wrap her arms around his neck again and her legs around his waist to hug him tightly. “Oh Hordak! You have no idea how many times I’ve dreamed that we could work together forever. I can’t wait!” She pulled back to look him in the eyes. “And I’ve always told you that indoor plumbing is the way to conquer Etheria.”

He chuckled, the sound still unfamiliar to him. “You have. But you have to wait a few days before we begin.” He smiled darkly at her.

“Why?” With her legs around his waist and her breasts pressed so firmly against his chest, he was baffled that she had to ask. Instead of answering her directly, he wrapped a broad hand around the back of her head and pulled her mouth into a fervid kiss. She hummed with comprehension and reciprocated immediately.

Waves of deep love and unbridled lust washed over him. He was drowning in this woman. She drove him wild with her hair and limbs everywhere, touching places he’d never been touched before, and her moans filled his ears as he cupped her breasts and squeezed her ample rear.

He walked forward with her in his arms, never ending their kiss, until her back was up against a tree where he trapped her with his body. In a few short seconds he’d ripped her spare clothes into pieces and pushed his tabard aside to press his hard shaft against her folds. He groaned at how soaked she already was and paused their frantic kisses to inhale the titillating aroma of her desire, such a potent scent in the air. “Entrapta, I must have you now.”

“Yes…” She agreed breathlessly and positioned herself on top of his cock, slowly sinking down onto him, but impatient as he was, he rammed his hips forward and slid deep inside her. He moaned at the feeling of being enveloped by her wet heat, yet he didn’t miss her gasp and slight hiss nor the pressure of her gloved hands digging into his shoulders. Her face was buried in his neck, her breathing shallow as she attempted to adjust to his intrusion.

He was struggling to stay still until she was ready, wanting to have more of her. But she was so small compared to him and he knew she might be sore from earlier. His right hand reached up to lift her face and gauge her reaction. The moment they locked eyes, she let out a breath of relief and started to move, grinding herself against him.

It was enough reassurance. He pulled nearly all the way out, then plunged back inside her slick core again and again, finding himself unable to hold back. He claimed her lips once more and again she moaned, spurring him on.

He mumbled words of love and the promise of a long life together between kisses - softly spoken words even as he took her hard against the tree - swearing to her as she clung to him and cried out his name that one day he would give her the stars.

Her tight walls contracted around his cock and she shook with rapture repeatedly. His control began to waver, her gasps and moans in his ears too enticing. She was his sanctum now, a true sanctuary, and with a last, fierce thrust, he let himself go inside her, feeling her radiance wash over him and calling out her name until his voice grew hoarse.

Afterwards, he swaddled her tired, naked body in his cape and sat back against the tree with her in his arms, delighting in the way she snuggled against his chest and covered them both with her hair while she began to talk about her plans for future projects.

He didn’t know if they were going to the Fright Zone next, to Dryl or some place else. All he knew was that they would be together and that would be enough.
