Eliminated scene: C-a-S, Ch 12 (Spies)

by Xenakis (IceRosesCrown)

Summary

A little spy and her magical friend walk into a very uncomfortable situation. "Curiosity killed the cat" or maybe this cat wants to jump from the edge of Mystacor after this.

Notes

This was so hard to write and edit, I feel it's simple but intense. [So special thanks to Ocean_Rider for helping out; best advice to fix the pacing <3 this 5-times-edited beta version is much better than the alfa version I originally wrote]
Also, it's easy to know why this had to be eliminated, I suppose.
And finally: I suggest reading this in the right mood... and alone.

Without further ado... the lesb-, I mean, the horn-, okay no.

—I appreciate it— Castaspella thanked her with a soft tone, before kissing Shadow Weaver on the cheek.

The woman remained frozen for a minute, her eyes wide open and her mouth agape. The next moment, she freed her hands from her grasp and suddenly held the Head Sorceress by the neck, pinning her against the back of the couch.

—What are you trying to do?— she hissed, with a mix of ire and fear.

Castaspella made no move, noticing there was no pressure on her neck.

—Bea… Calm down— she asked her gently.

—Are you trying to play me for a fool!? What was that?— she questioned her, with increasing distress.

—No, no. It was… sincere. I promise— she replied.

—Lies.

—Please, Bea, listen to me— she begged, speaking firmly. —Why would I lie to you?

—Then you must be drunk or something, but do not pretend you honestly wanted to kiss me — she retorted, holding her neck slightly tighter.

—I am not, you know it— she insisted.

—Are you not weary of me?— Shadow Weaver asked, incredulous.

—Not at all.

—Aren't you afraid I might suffocate you any moment now? That I might dig my claws into your throat? I can harm no one, except you— she reminded her with a severe, obviously malicious, tone.

—You wouldn't hurt me.

—You can't know that.

—I am sure you won't. And that was just a nightmare. Even if you tighten your grip, I know you will release me before seriously harming me— Castaspella stated confidently.

—You... are… the fool. Not... me— she seethed, closing her hand around her neck. Yet the woman made no move, just breathed carefully, and stared at her with full trust in her eyes. — Ugh! You reckless idiot!

The woman released her neck but held her chin instead, wanting her to face her furious expression.

—Well, I might be a fool but I was right, no?— she taunted.

—Do you have a death wish or something? How can you simply trust the people around you without proof?— she angrily questioned, her claws slightly scratching her skin.

—Am I supposed to expect everyone to try to kill me? I rather trust until there's an actual threat.

—That's the most stupid thing I've heard you say— she uttered. —So you would let just anyone threaten you like I just did and make no move to stop them!?

Castaspella's look suddenly changed as she asked back —Are you jealous again? Did you expect me to solely trust you so blindly?

—You wish— she quickly replied, rolling her eyes. She still held her chin as she towered over her on the sofa. —I wasn't jealous, nor am I now. Just... Concerned for your poor life decisions.

The Head Sorceress let out a strident laugh that slightly startled Shadow Weaver, making her lose her balance. She had to quickly reposition her legs to avoid falling, and her knee came to rest right between Castapella's legs.

The woman heard her gasp briefly, struggling to breathe, and her face had reddened; but instead of pain in her eyes, she could have sworn she saw only lust.

—Ah… Do-don't… move— she uttered as she grabbed the closest thing to her left hand, Shadow Weaver's clothes, making sure she wouldn't pull away.

—Cas… Are you… sure?

Castaspella gulped and nodded; breathless, she managed to request —Please?

Shadow Weaver couldn't believe her ears, but it was clear from her expression she had heard right. Suddenly, the nerdy and correct Head Sorceress had become extremely tempting, even for her.

She barely moved her knee forward and instantly incited a gasp from Castaspella who tilted her head back and closed her eyes. Without her cape, her neck and collarbone were completely bare; the woman couldn't resist another second and bent forward to kiss her skin.

As she leaned forth, Shadow Weaver's knee pressed harder between her legs and exhorted a moan from Castaspella, immediately arousing the woman. Her kisses intensified until she was biting the base of her neck, and the Head Sorceress couldn't help but melt under her, craving her touch but unable to ask for it.

Yet Shadow Weaver needed little encouragement to give her more. Her hands teased the rim of Castaspella's dress and made her moan her name, her real name, finally pushing the woman over the limit. Any restraints left vanished. She didn't think a single thing from then on, just let her instincts guide her hands around the trembling body beneath her.

Neither of them noticed the door of the room open briefly, and it was impossible to see the girl that slipped inside with the cloaking magic. But the scene she found froze her right next to the entrance. Catra was so shocked she couldn't even think about leaving immediately; she just kept telling herself she was not seeing them, not hearing them, and had to make a conscious effort to keep herself silent. She said she would have screamed if she saw them kissing, but this was so much worse... Melog could feel her distress and tried to pull her and leave, yet only when it became obvious the women wouldn't stop at all but rather that the clothes were getting in the way, she finally recovered and left the room without looking back. Catra held her breath until she had closed the door in absolute silence so she could return to the gardens undetected and pretend she had never been there.

Shadow Weaver had pulled Castaspella's dress up, loosened her hair while pulling her head back, and bit the woman's neck briefly, over and over again; then moved both hands down to her legs, turned around holding the Head Sorceress against her body, and settled her on her lap. The woman then let her claws wander into Castaspella, careful enough not to draw blood, but itching to make her whimper again.

She held onto Shadow Weaver as if her life depended on it, keeping her eyes tightly closed and feeling she would explode if those claws didn't reach deeper soon. Her breathing became heavier, she kept gasping for air as the woman deliberately explored her insides, tortuously slow for Castaspella to bear.

She couldn't help uttering her name, with such plea in her voice it fed Shadow Weaver's hunger and the need to extract every last whine from the Head Sorceress. She could feel how suddenly ravenous the woman had gotten, bitting her neck harder and finally reaching deeper inside her, letting her claws scratch the walls just delightfully enough to send several waves of bliss through Castaspella's body.

They didn't realize how much they needed the relief until Shadow Weaver extracted her claws completely soaked. The Head Sorceress was extremely tired, completely drained of energy, and let herself rest on her shoulder, oblivious to the soft look on the woman's face.

She got up from the couch holding Castaspella and took her to the bed, laid her over the sheets, carefully removed her crown, and left it on a desk as she went to get a towel from the room's bathroom. A moment later, she heard a faint voice and returned, still holding the towel.

—Don't… go too far…— the Head Sorceress mumbled weakly.

—Stop resisting sleep— Shadow Weaver scolded her. —Just rest already.

—How come…—, she yawned, —…You're still…

—Cas. Sleep. Now— the woman insisted and threw the towel at her. —You've already forgotten I'm dead.

—You could’ve fooled me— she replied, after yawning again.

Castaspella apparently felt uncomfortable with the wetness between her legs and absentmindedly cleaned herself with the towel.

—I can hardly believe you're not drunk. I have to worry if I ever see you with a cup of alcohol.

—Mean— Castaspella groaned. Shadow Weaver took the towel from her and returned it to the bathroom. Then, she went once more to check on the Head Sorceress and supposed she was asleep. But as soon as she moved to leave, she felt her clothes being pulled weakly, and heard —Stay… Please.

After a moment of hesitation, the woman sighed —You would be my downfall if I wasn't already as ruined as one can be.

—Great, no excuses then— Castaspella insisted drowsily, convincing her to lay by her side at last.

Shadow Weaver let her wrap her arms around her hips and comfortably rest her head on her belly. The woman doubted a bit but finally allowed herself to run a hand through Castaspella's loose hair.

—You should have it down more— she whispered, sure the Head Sorceress hadn't heard.

End Notes

I know, I'm sorry, I promise I'm not trying to clown you...
It just happened

12 chapters and not a single kiss on the lips!? THIS chapter and none still!? Yes, indeed…
But if I managed to make an E-rated work STILL have psychological exploration behind it, it shouldn't surprise you, lol!

Okay, no, seriously; accept this as an early apology for what's coming next week TT-TT
