Summary

A bad evening takes the Head Sorceress down for a visit to Shadow Weaver once again, and the woman will have a little fun idea to propose Castaspella…

She wanted to relax, didn't she?

Notes

In the remote case you don't come from Throw away The Mask, just know there are details specific to that fic which apply here, like SW having a magical summoned form and not her real body, hence her senses being numb, or the thing about Casta making SW feel her feelings through the spell, or in general the context of the situation. It's a lot...
But, whatever. If you're looking forward to reading horny women, be my guest XD

Castaspella arrived at the magical groove extremely tense that night. So much so, that Shadow Weaver felt compelled to pull the sorceress into a massage. That way, she spent some time kneading the back of Castaspella's shoulders while amusedly listening to her ranting about the obnoxious theatre manager.

After a while, however, Shadow Weaver had an idea, something she wasn't sure whether it would offend the sorceress, yet she decided to propose it regardless.

Teasing the rim of Castaspella's dress under her cape, she asked —What about something more relaxing?

—What… are you doing?

—You seemed to like it last time…— she insisted, smirking.

A part of her was internally screaming in rage, but another part was hoping the sorceress would accept, so she told herself it was nothing but lust, and tried not to give it much thought besides that.

—This is not a great moment to tease me, nor is it an appropriate subject— Castaspella uttered, her face reddened.

Amused, Shadow Weaver whispered in her ear —It's not a tease, it's an offer.

An offer…

Castaspella tensed up momentarily, quickly relaxed again, and closed her eyes as she sighed.

—You… don't mind?

—It's a form of assistance. And quite selfish, as I'm trying to get rid of the annoying feeling you're making me feel right now— Shadow Weaver replied, dismissive.

—Only you would see it that way— Castaspella muttered, leaning back on the woman. —But if I play one of your cards… I can see it as a mutually beneficial trade…

—Now you speak my language— she replied, smirking as she pulled up the sorceress' cape. —You're lucky it's warm season…

—It's a nice night, yes. Not too hot nor too cold.

As soon as the cape was set aside, Castaspella lay down on the ground, eyes still closed, and took a deep breath. Her mind raced with frantic thoughts and anticipation, and she couldn't help feeling that this would be the closest she'd ever be to being loved by Shadow Weaver.

On the other hand, the woman couldn't understand what she was feeling through the spell except for the nervousness, and a hint of regret appeared at the back of her mind.

—If you have any second thoughts…

—I don't— the sorceress assured her, finally opening her eyes. —You?

—I offered it, didn't I?

—But?

—I don't understand how you can trust me so much— Shadow Weaver admitted.

—You have serious trust issues…

—I do trust you— the woman reminded her, frowning.

—That's not what I meant— Castaspella quickly replied. —I refer to how you don't trust yourself— she clarified. —You feel like a real monster, and believe my trust is misplaced. Yet you haven't once betrayed me. You're respectful, at least with me, you never assume… Just now, you asked me if I was sure I wanted this— she elaborated. —And I do.

—I see…— she sighed. —Then what do you want?

—I…— the sorceress hesitated. But then, a spark appeared in her eyes as she requested — Kiss my body like last time…

—So I shall.

With those words, Shadow Weaver rested a hand on Castaspella's hips as she carefully placed her knee between her legs. It made the sorceress hold her breath and a light whine escaped her. Leaning forward, she went for Castaspella's wrists and moved them up to hold them together over the sorceress' head.

Her face now hoovered just a palm above Castaspella's and her sight fixed on her black lips for an instant. A fleeting thought crossed her mind, but she decided against it and went for the sorceress' neck instead. She pressed a bit harder with her knee while kissing down towards her collarbone, and made sure to remain where the cape would hide her harsh kisses and the bites she started to give her.

Shadow Weaver held her wrists tighter as the sorceress' struggled under her, itching to hold onto the woman and press her closer to her body. Yet she could barely feel Castaspella's skin under her lips, or that her nails had started to dig into the sorceress' wrists since her grip tightened.

Hissing in pain, Castaspella let out —Damn it…

—What?

—Your claws… are cutting me— she replied, hissing again.

Immediately, she felt Shadow Weaver release her, and opened her eyes, surprised.

—I didn’t mean to…

—Wait, it’s alright— the sorceress quickly assured her. —I-I didn’t say you had to stop, just… be more careful.

—No. It’s better if I don’t go on— the woman refused, moving her knee back, and starting to withdraw completely.

—Bea— Castaspella called, pushing herself up and grabbing one of Shadow Weaver’s wrists to stop her. —Please listen to me. I never said you had to stop. Pay attention to my words: you can keep holding my wrists, but now try to be more careful. Can you do that?

Shadow Weaver glanced at the tiny cuts on her wrist before looking back at her. The sorceress had such a gentle look that the woman was taken aback for a moment.

She simply couldn’t understand.

But it was true that she wasn’t really listening to her.

—I’ll try…

Shadow Weaver feared something would go wrong, and as it happened, she was even more hesitant now. Afraid of hurting her, even if she’d never admit it, her kisses became more tender, enough that she noticed Castaspella’s tension vanishing little by little. The sorceress breathed out faint sighs and no longer struggled to free her arms; only her legs were tense as she pressed herself against Shadow Weaver’s knee.

But it didn’t last long.

The woman retreated and Castaspella pushed herself up, face red and feeling warmer from head to feet, almost sweating under the dress. Confused, she kneeled in front of Shadow Weaver and tilted her head, trying to decipher her expression.

—What’s the matter?

—Nothing…

Sure, nothing. Castaspella knew, and felt, that was a lie.

Placing her hands on the woman’s waist, the sorceress leant forward and spoke with a lower tone, —Are you sure? If you’re afraid of hurting me…

Castaspella trailed off as her hands began wandering Shadow Weaver’s body, and it was evident what she meant. So, at first, the woman allowed it despite feeling it so faintly, like a tease. Until she saw her hands nearing her lower belly, and immediately stopped the sorceress.

—Don’t— she uttered. —I don’t want that.

—I understand— Castaspella replied, withdrawing her hands. —I apologize.

It surprised Shadow Weaver that the sorceress didn't ask why. It was a relief not having to admit what happened to her, but at the same time, a part of her still wanted to tell her.

After all…

—I mean… My senses are reduced. So much that I barely feel you, so it would be unbearable to- Your touch would feel like a tease, torture— she finally explained. —It's not that I don't trust you— she admitted, barely muttering. —I don't even feel the same level of arousal anymore, but it's enough to want your touch to be hard enough. Which simply can't happen.

With a small smile, Castaspella nodded in understanding. It warmed her heart to hear her confess that, so an idea occurred to her that would shift the focus away from this matter.

—Then… What about…— she began, before producing a deck of cards. —Playing some? You wanted to play with stakes, no?

—But you only have, what? Two pieces of clothing left?

—Then let's make it so that if you win five rounds, I take off one.

—What if you win five rounds?

—I put one back on.

—So if you win five before I do…

—I put on my cape— Castaspella interrupted her, smirking. —Better make sure to win, no?

—Hah! I will— Shadow Weaver sentenced, mirroring her smirk.

Without losing more time, the sorceress began the game, and easily won the first round.

Expected.

However, the next two rounds, Shadow Weaver won. And after Castaspella won one more, the woman beat her the following three rounds.

Without saying a word, the sorceress took off her dress, folded it neatly, and left it with her cape. However, a shiver ran down her spine and she had a blanket appear.

—This doesn't count— she told her. —It's not clothing.

—I didn't say anything…— Shadow Weaver replied, condescending. —Shall we continue?

The women went on playing; each won a round, then Castaspella was beaten three times in a row again before winning her fourth round, and finally, Shadow Weaver narrowly won two more.

It came as a shock for the woman, even more when the sorceress took off her underwear without complaining or anything.

Then, realization hit…

—You let me win— Shadow Weaver accused her.

—Of course not— Castaspella lied, casually setting the deck aside. Her look betrayed her, yet she kept pretending innocence while saying —I suppose… it's because I'm still too tense, wouldn't you say?

She let the blanket fall as she moved closer to Shadow Weaver, who stared at her in surprise when the sorceress sat on her lap.

—Right…

Castaspella rested her arms on the woman's shoulders, looking away, and her expression softened as she told her —I now realize how… helpful it was for me to just stop and reflect on things that are "obvious" for others. You know, so I could explain them to you.

—Yet now you won't stop a second to breathe, at least— Shadow Weaver mocked her, hesitantly wrapping her arms around her.

—Exactly— she chuckled.

—Then you better use this moment for that— the woman suggested, holding her with more confidence.

Similar to that night in Castaspella's room, Shadow Weaver lowered one of her hands until she reached between the sorceress' legs, and carefully let her claws slide inside. She visibly tensed at that and let out breathless moans the deeper the fingers went.

Careful not to cut her this time, Shadow Weaver raised her free hand towards Castaspella's chest and held her right breast, gently at first, then a bit harder as the sorceress' moans became louder. The woman squeezed it while her fingers carefully and slowly moved inside her, and Castaspella began panting, legs tense and forehead pressed to Shadow Weaver's without noticing.

Less hesitant now, she reached deeper inside the sorceress, drawing a strained whine and making her legs tense even more, while also teasing her nipple, rubbing it between her fingers.

Castaspella's breath became shallow, and her moans were barely audible, until she held her breath. Shadow Weaver had reached just the perfect point, she felt close, and couldn't draw a breath.

—That- I…— the sorceress stammered, her voice faint.

—Cas…— Shadow Weaver called, immediately realizing. —Breathe— she reminded her. —Just breathe— she slowly repeated, letting go of her breast to wrap her arm around Castaspella. —Didn't we say you would take this moment to breathe?— she insisted, more playful.

And she finally did.

With a deep breath, the sorceress curved her back and slowly breathed out with her eyes closed. Her hands tightly gripped Shadow Weaver's shoulders before she let out a pleased moan, relieved at last.

The woman let her fingers wander in circles for a moment before withdrawing her hand, inevitably amused.

It was exactly like the last time.

—Ah… Thanks— Castaspella sighed, resting her head on Shadow Weaver's shoulder. She clumsily tried to teleport a towel from her room, but only half of it appeared. —Damn it— she uttered, voice tired.

—Good enough, considering your poor state— Shadow Weaver mocked her, reaching for the piece of towel.

Right after cleaning her hand, she gave it to the sorceress so she could clean herself like the last time, and then helped her lay down on a side of the blanket, while the other side covered her naked body.

But the sorceress reached out for her, and wrapped her arms around Shadow Weaver's waist, pulling her closer.

—Stay here— she mumbled.

—Alright, alright— the woman let out, resigned. —Just like the last time, no?

It was, but the sorceress entirely ignored her question, and instead asked —Do you… remember when we went to investigate together?

Confused at the sudden change of subject, she asked —What about it?

—Remember that I fell on my back? I couldn't breathe— Castaspella continued, fondly recalling the event.

—I do.

—Just now, it reminded me of that— she admitted. —I was… a real fool, no?

How much she itched to say "yes".

Yet, this time, Shadow Weaver countered —You were just too focused on the murals. So much that you paid no attention to your surroundings, or my warnings.

—Exactly.

—But, thanks to you, we got the information we needed— she added.

And that had actually impressed her. But she wouldn't dare admit it.

—I suppose…

—Now you better sleep. I won't be around to keep you awake during the day this time— Shadow Weaver mocked her.

The sorceress only hummed in agreement and soon fell soundly asleep.

For some hours until the sun was up, the woman was left alone with her thoughts, and absentmindedly held a strand of Castaspella's loose hair between her fingers. She was looking at the distance, internally discussing with herself, still trying to argue it had been only lust. But it carried no relief for her, she didn't even have such needs anymore, so how could lust make her offer this?

The same could be asked about the feelings she got when seeing the sorceress naked, or when she sat on her lap, or even now, having her sleeping nude next to her.

Well, she told herself it was mere… admiration for her body, and surprise at Castaspella's trust in her.

But who was she kidding…

It was the realization that the sorceress had fully surrendered herself to her. Without hesitation, and with utter desire.

When was the last time anyone desired her?

She had no idea…

So now, she couldn't help cursing her numb senses… What wouldn't she have given to properly feel that skin under her touch?

She couldn't wonder much about that, however, as she was interrupted by a familiar voice ringing through the Woods.

Right.

The sun was already up.

Whatever security they had before, that no one would show up, was now gone.

—Auntie, are you here!?— the Queen called out, right before entering the groove. She immediately halted when she realized Castaspella had to be naked under that blanket, and turned around, saying —I… can come back later…

But Castaspella was already awake, and all traces of sleep vanished as soon as she looked up and saw Glimmer. Although she had already turned around, the sorceress couldn't help instinctively covering herself with the blanket.

This was so, so bad.

—Just give me a moment!— she nervously requested, fetching her clothes. —I just need a minute!

—How quaint— Shadow Weaver muttered, amused. —At least you had the blanket.

—Shut up. I swear. Just shut up— the sorceress replied, face red with embarrassment, and clearly annoyed at her. —You should have woken me up!

—This is not my fault— the woman immediately replied. Smirking, she mocked her —How could I have known your niece would come looking for you?

—It doesn't matter!— Castaspella retorted, struggling to put on her cape. —It could have been anyone!

—Good thing it wasn't…

—Don't say it!

Shadow Weaver laughed at her reaction, it was obvious she knew what she intended to say.

—Alright then, stop complaining and come here— she ordered, reaching for her loose hair. It was a bit knotted, but Shadow Weaver managed to untangle it easily enough. —Your hair is a mess this morning…

—Thank you for the compliment— Castaspella replied, rolling her eyes.

—There. Go now before you die of embarrassment and Glimmer runs away.

—Fuck you!

—It was the other way round…

—Ugh! You just have to…

—Stop complaining and go.

—Yes, yes. I'm leaving— she sighed.

Shadow Weaver stared at her back as she walked away, the sights from the previous night still clouding her mind, and soon felt the pull of the core drag her back beneath the surface.
