I Find Them Cheerful

by Xenakis (IceRosesCrown)

Summary

As the war ended, the Princess Alliance had to handle the aftermath, which included judging their former enemies. However, they decided to leave Shadow Weaver in the capable hands of the Sorcerers Guild, which led to the dark sorceress being sentenced to community service, under the supervision of the Head Sorceress herself.

And yet, after spending a good deal of time together, certain feelings inevitably develop, and a little accident leads to a spicy conclusion…

(Edit: added a visual on the end notes 😉)

Notes

Well, damn. This was fun to write 😂😂 I normally work a bit more with SW to make plausible fluff BUT I think I managed it alright here.
And, ofc, I wouldn't be me if I didn't include plot
So if you're here for the smut, you'll have to bear the first 2k words first XD

Anyways, thanks Bagge for the idea/challenge!!

See the end of the work for more notes

She was finally done for the day.

It had been raining since morning, and her task was not easy to begin with, but Shadow Weaver still got it done…

With her magic restored, and her health stable once more, sentencing her to community service in order to make up for her crimes during the war was more than reasonable…

As she returned to Mystacor, she couldn't help thinking about how lucky she was that the Princess Alliance let the Sorcerers Guild council handle her case; being judged by the Princesses instead would have been a nightmare.

At least, while the council was certainly not fond of her, they had to abide by Castaspella's decision, and the Head Sorceress was possibly the only person who respected her in all of Etheria. And, after the investigation that led to the Failsafe, she had also developed a considerable degree of respect for her, which was a lot for Shadow Weaver's standards.

She finally arrived at her assigned room, drenched in rain, and went directly into the bathroom. She felt stupid for not using some spell to protect herself from the rain, but… perhaps she was a bit distracted.

Fortunately, it wasn't raining in Mystacor so, after having a warm shower, she decided to go to the gardens.

After a few months of proving that she had no ill intentions, and diligently complying with her sentence, Castaspella had decided to grant her one wish. Shadow Weaver considered her naïve for having such a gesture, specially for making it broad enough that the dark sorceress could have easily taken advantage of it…

But instead, she only asked to be allowed to grow some plants in Mystacor's gardens. So now, she could go and tend to it after one of the worst days of work she had in months…

It was nearly nighttime when she felt someone approach from behind.

—Well, look who came to visit my little garden— she teasingly said. —I thought you'd be curious sooner… Head Sorceress.

—And who says I didn't come to check it out while you were away?— Castaspella teased her back. They both smirked at that, as yet another tug-o-war began. —Did you want me to visit you here?

—Perhaps?— Shadow Weaver replied, standing up. She took a step towards her and, with a daring look, added —Maybe I want to see whether you'd find it suspicious that I grow magical plants…

—I actually find it convenient. It would prove that my idea of granting you this wasn't that bad if you, perhaps, allowed us to use some as ingredients— Castaspella bargained.

—What would I get in return?— the dark sorceress asked, squinting, and moving yet another step closer. —These are escarse and I would rather not have all my hard work taken from me.

—And you won't— she assured her, stepping forward too. —Haven't I made it clear that I prefer striking deals with you instead of, you know, abusing my authority?

—Which I still find quite foolish…

—Sure you do— the Head Sorceress scoffed. —Keep lying to yourself.

—Whatever makes you think I don't think that?

—I can see how much you enjoy our deals! They may not be as serious as the one we made in the forest, of course, but just like our little game of wits, our deals basically make your eyes sparkle— Castaspella laughed.

—Ma-make them… sparkle?— Shadow Weaver stammered, taken aback yet making an effort to hide it. She raised a hand up to her face as if suddenly remembering she had taken off her mask and cursed under her breath. —And why are you so damn cheerful now? I don't find it funny… Either you're messing with me, or admitting you pay too much attention to me— she pointed out, giving her a curious yet daring look at the end to hide her initial fluster.

—You are my responsibility…

—But you seem to care beyond that— she pressed on.

—I've been told I'm too observant, so I just happened to notice— Castaspella argued.

—Sure you did. Keep lying to yourself— Shadow Weaver mocked her, folding her arms.

—I walked right into that one…

The dark sorceress let out a chuckle while smirking, which made her giggle too.

—Enough with the mockery now. Why are you here? Have I done something wrong?— Shadow Weaver inquired, looking away with a displeased expression.

—No, no. Nothing wrong. I just… noticed you were here despite it being so late and was curious— Castaspella quickly corrected her. —Besides, I was told you were working under the rain all day. Your health is delicate as it is; I won't have you dying on my watch— she sentenced.

—Quite nice of you to worry, but I can handle myself— she assured her.

—I'm not putting your skills into question. I'm sure you can deal with a cold, but that doesn't mean…— Castaspella tried to argue, but trailed off.

—Doesn't mean?

—Forget it— she uttered, gesturing dismissively with a hand. As she looked away, slightly ashamed, her sight lingered on the plants to her right and she suddenly remembered something. —If you don't mind… I've been meaning to ask you about these plants. I don't really recognize them all.

—I'd be surprised if you did— Shadow Weaver condescendingly replied. —Most of these are my own breeds. Hybrids of common plants that enhance their individual qualities.

—You- That's- I didn't know you were such an experienced gardener— Castaspella let out, surprised.

—Why would you? We established you barely know me, remember?

—Well, but… you told me a lot of things about you, said this was a little hobby of yours… I don't see why you couldn't have mentioned your expertise— she argued, almost indignant. —You love bragging about how much you know, after all…

—Fair— Shadow Weaver had to accept. Then, noticing Castaspella's curious look, she offered — Would you like me to give you a little tour? You seem terribly interested.

—Look who's being observant now— the Head Sorceress smirked. Her expression then softened as she accepted —Sure.

While showing her each plant and meticulously explaining what they were and their properties, Shadow Weaver appeared to be in the zone. She spoke in a tutor-like manner, with notorious passion, even a hint of gentleness that made Castaspella see her in a different light.

She wouldn't dare say she had "softened", but it was evident the dark sorceress wasn't just a two-dimensional monster. It made her glad of the decisions she had been making regarding her; it was reassuring to know that the something she had seen in her, what made the Head Sorceress abandon her blind hate in exchange for a more neutral opinion, wasn't just her imagination or wishful thinking.

After that night, Castaspella went to the gardens more often, reiterating how they could make a deal for the plants to be used by everyone, and offered certain liberties in exchange, which Shadow Weaver eventually accepted.

Funny enough, she only asked for better food, and it made the Head Sorceress incredibly mad to know she wasn't being given the same food as everyone else. With that solved, however, Castaspella argued she could still ask for something else, as the issue with the food shouldn't have happened to begin with.

After some consideration, Shadow Weaver asked for one thing: to be allowed to teach again. In her free time, of course, but she wanted to be a tutor again.

The Head Sorceress had to fight for it, but the council finally accepted it, only if Castaspella extended her responsibilities to include overseeing the dark sorceress' classes.

—So I'd have a babysitter?

—No, no…

—Right.

—Fine, I guess it's a bit like that— she had to admit. —But they hardly accepted your request, I couldn't refuse their only condition.

—I suppose that's fair— Shadow Weaver reluctantly agreed.

They were, once again, at her garden, and Castaspella couldn't help looking around with interest. Until her sight landed on a bunch of flowers she hadn't seen before.

—Are those new?— she asked, walking past the dark sorceress to approach them. Having a closer look, she recognized —Daisies?

—Took me a while to get the seeds, but yes— Shadow Weaver nodded, standing next to her. —Why so surprised?

—They just… Well, they aren't magical. Why would you grow them?

—I just like them— she argued.

—Really? Why?

—I find them cheerful…

—You… like cheerful things?— Castaspella let out, confused. —But… you-you always complain about me being too cheerful!

—Daisies don't speak— Shadow Weaver remarked, smirking maliciously.

—Mean!

Her annoyed, child-like retort made the dark sorceress laugh in full earnest, which shocked her even more. She stared at her, stunned, blushing deeply.

Castaspella was lucky that the moonlight barely illuminated her…

As Shadow Weaver began her classes, always after fulfilling her duties for the day and until nighttime arrived, she decided to focus on teaching potions and spells powered by magical plants.

Just from observing the classes, the Head Sorceress learnt quite a lot about the subject too. And watching her teach was, for the most part, a nice experience. Castaspella rarely had to intervene, only when the dark sorceress had sudden fits of rage out of disappointment, and, as a way to encourage her to control herself, she proposed another deal.

Every time the Head Sorceress was forced to intervene like that, Shadow Weaver would have to give her one of her daisies. From her expression, Castaspella knew she had hit the nail. In fact, the dark sorceress seemed in physical pain every time she had to give her one or more.

But a deal was a deal, and she would have to learn some self-control if she wanted to preserve her dear flowers.

After half a year, Shadow Weaver had given Castaspella at least a hundred daisies, and had been close to losing them all a few times.

Yet it proved to be effective.

No one knew about the deal, but everyone noticed the change in behaviour… Even the council.

So, one night, Castaspella went to give her the good news.

—The council is considering giving you a chance at a second trial. If you show your growth, they are willing to lessen your sentence!

The sorceresses were sitting on the grass, right next to to the daisies, which Shadow Weaver looked for a moment while pondering on what she said.

Had she really changed?

That month she had only given Castaspella one daisy… perhaps she did change a bit.

—It makes no sense. What I've done won't be erased or forgotten just because I changed my attitude— she argued. —Serving the people I helped torment is only fair and the least I should do.

—But that's the thing: you admit it. Why not help them out of your own volition instead of being forced to? You wouldn't have to stick to a fixed schedule, you'd be allowed to rest and have more free time now that you spend most of it teaching…

—Aren't you concerned about your reputation? What would the Princess Alliance think if you and the council lessened my sentence that much?— Shadow Weaver asked, disbelieving. —I am supposed to pay for my crimes…

Pushing herself up a bit to kneel and sit on her legs instead, Castaspella leant forward and argued —You are supposed to answer for them, and you have. I'm not saying it's all gone and forgotten. I'm just… I think you deserve a second chance now that you proved yourself.

—Quit being so lenient…— the dark sorceress complained, pushing her back slightly and making her lose balance. Yet when she noticed her trying and failing to recover it, she realized the sorceress would fall on her bud of daisies and immediately aimed to grab her by the arm. —Not on my daisies— she uttered, pulling from Castaspella with more strength than necessary, which made her fall back on the grass with the Head Sorceress on top.

—I…— she breathed out, her face hovering just above Shadow Weaver's maskless face. —Sorry?

—I pulled you. If anything, it's my fault— the dark sorceress countered, dissimulating her nervousness but unable to just look away.

Yet despite her severe tone, Castaspella could feel her fast heart-beat and was suddenly too conscious of their proximity.

Or rather, of the fact that their bodies were pressed together.

—Sho-should I get off you?— she stammered, her thoughts an absolute mess.

—Least you intend to rest on me…

Shadow Weaver meant to mock her, but didn't think it would instead sound so… inviting.

—Maybe…— Castaspella uttered without thinking. As the dark sorceress opened her eyes wide, she realized what she had said and, fumbling with her words, stammered —I-I mean… I- Well, I would never do that! No-not that I have a problem with you! I mean- I wouldn't want to… to make you uncomfortable like that… I shouldn't- I don't want to disturb you…

—And if I said that wouldn't disturb me?

Speechless, Castaspella could only stare at her, breathing heavily, her gaze shifting from her eyes to her mouth and back.

After a few seconds that felt like hours, she breathed out —Excuse me.

And kissed her.

The sorceress was fully expecting Shadow Weaver to push her away, to reject her, but instead, she kissed her back…

Neither of them could think clearly. They forgot where they were, what they were doing, and that literally anyone could see them out there. They were just too absorbed by the sudden passion of their kiss, and instinctively let their hands roam free around each other's bodies.

Shadow Weaver brushed her hands lower and lower down Castaspella's back who, in turn, squeezed Shadow Weaver's sides moving up to her breasts.

However, when they broke the kiss, gasping for air, they finally became conscious of their surroundings and blushed furiously.

—This is…

—Inappropriate?

—No-not the right place— Castaspella corrected her, looking away with a small smile.

—You… want to… do this?— Shadow Weaver hesitantly asked, surprised. When she nodded, the dark sorceress inquired —Are you sure? What about…

—I don't care about my reputation as much as I- Ugh… I just want this— she admitted, still looking away. —I don't know if it's just lust… or something else.

—But you want to explore it— she completed. The Head Sorceress nodded shyly and she reached up to turn her face her way. —Perhaps I do too…

Giddy, Castaspella guided Shadow Weaver to her room, both sneaking through the halls like teenagers…

Once inside, the sorceress let out a deep breath. She could feel her heart beating fast still, anticipating what they would do, and bit her lip trying to hold back a laugh.

—Welcome to my room— she finally said, smirking as she turned to face the dark sorceress. —If you want to get rid of the grass in your hair, the bathroom is that way— she offered.

—I'll be out in a minute— she replied, promptly making her way there.

Her tone was neutral, a bit serious perhaps, and it made Castaspella's mind go wild in the wrong direction.

What if she was having second thoughts?

What if this was wrong?

She didn't exactly care about that, but if Shadow Weaver did…

What if doing this ruined the strange kind of friendship they had developed?

Or perhaps, now that the moment had "passed", what if the dark sorceress didn't find her as enticing as before?

Well, she'd have to make sure that wouldn't happen…

Meanwhile, inside the bathroom, Shadow Weaver furiously shook her hair to get rid of all the grass. Once done, she gasped for air, feeling unusually out of sorts, and exposed. She then remembered that she had left her mask out in the garden and huffed angrily.

Did she want to do this?

Damn, she did… but why?

It only angered her more to realize the answer: she had come to like Castaspella. Perhaps too much. And it made her feel… weak.

But the feeling was so strong it overwhelmed her.

She'd do this. She needed to.

She'd get the lust out of her system and then, if the feeling remained… she'd have to sort it out.

Once she felt ready, she finally left the room, only to find the most unexpected scene.

With the lights off, only the moonlight coming through the window illuminated the bed, where Castaspella laid naked, her breasts and pelvis covered by dozens of flowers.

Daisies…

—Like what you see?— she dared ask, after noticing the dark sorceress staring.

—Where did you…

—I preserved each flower with spells. Never thought I'd used them this way, though— she replied, smiling faintly. —Will you come to remove them?

She'd be damned…

Her initial arousal was nothing compared to what she was feeling now.

—How creative— she smirked, approaching the bed. —It's almost a shame to have to disturb such a pretty sight— she added.

—You find me pretty?

—Like this? Sure— Shadow Weaver replied, smirk widening.

—You don't find me pretty with clothes!?

—You're usually too nerdy for me to even look at you that way— she admitted, sitting on the mattress next to her. She then reached for her face and traced her jawline, adding —But you're not just a nerdy little sorceress, are you?

—I am not… And I would like to be repaid in kind— Castaspella replied, tugging at her clothes. —Off with the robes and join me here, won't you?

Feeling suddenly thirsty, she didn't even hesitate to obey and crawled on top of the sorceress to carefully remove each flower, almost with reverence. For every flower she removed, she planted a kiss on the sorceress' body…

—You kept them all?

—Every single one.

—You're so cheese…— she scoffed, albeit smiling. Once all the daisies were gone, Shadow Weaver lowered to whisper in her ear —How would you want to do this? Should we start slow or…

—I think I'm too aroused for "slow" right now— Castaspella admitted. —You took your time with the flowers…

—So you're itching for it, aren't you?— the dark sorceress teased her. —Alright, I won't torture you anymore.

Without a second thought, Shadow Weaver carefully turned around, and Castaspella promptly grabbed her thighs to pull her down on her face.

Taken by surprise, she couldn't hold back a moan feeling the sorceress' tongue inside her.

She arched her back briefly, forgetting for a moment her initial plan, and just letting Castaspella eat her up. But it only made her more thirsty, and she finally bent down to do the same.

Shadow Weaver could feel the sorceress moan into her from time to time, occasionally sucking hard, and sticking her tongue as deep as possible. Mirroring her actions, she held Castaspella's legs wide open for her, digging her nails without noticing.

They made each other cum eventually, but didn't want to stop there…

Still hungry for each other, wanting even more, Shadow Weaver let the sorceress push her down on the bed and sit on her, grabbing her breasts with both hands as she rubbed herself against the dark sorceress, moving her hips back and forth as hard as she could.

But Shadow Weaver had the power to make it better…

With a warning that Castaspella barely heard, she summoned a pair of black tendrils and pushed them into both of them, which made them moan loudly.

The sorceress closed her eyes tightly, asking for more between moans, and released Shadow Weaver's breasts to grab her hands instead, pulling them up over their heads while kissing her harshly.

The tendrils moved back and forth increasingly faster, each thrust harder, reaching deeper… until they cummed once again.

Shadow Weaver's body tensed up until she felt the release and withdrew the tendril from inside her. It took a moment for Castaspella to reach her climax too, and once relieved, she let herself fall on top of the dark sorceress, gasping for air.

—I never… thought I'd… like that… so much— she let out, breathless.

—I wouldn't have imagined… I'd do this with you— Shadow Weaver admitted, a bit more recovered by now.

—Ugh… I… I want more— Castaspella complained, turning her face to kiss the dark sorceress's neck.

—You won't be able to… hmm… move tomorrow— she pointed out, holding back a moan. —But I don't mind this…

—Then… let me… keep kissing you— the sorceress replied, between each kiss.

The following morning, just as expected, neither sorceress could move without groaning, and despite having taken a bath, together, they woke up sweaty and sticky.

—Are you awake?— Shadow Weaver asked, having felt the sorceress stirring between her arms.

—No…

She chuckled and caressed her hair slowly.

—Aren't you supposed to get up early?

—I refuse…— Castaspella groaned.

—Fine by me…— the dark sorceress smirked. —But you better have a great excuse for my absence in today's schedule.

—Fuck— she swore, before groaning again. —Alright… five more minutes…

Once they finally got up, put on their clothes, and made sure to look presentable, they went to have breakfast together, and completely ignored those looking at them with curious looks.

They were just eating together… there was no way they could know…

—Great. Now we have stalkers— Shadow Weaver muttered. —Can't even have breakfast in peace.

—Ignore them… They are just, I don't know, surprised to see us sitting together, I guess— Castaspella replied, a bit too aloof for the dark sorceress' taste.

—As someone who used to stalk people, there is a lot you can guess just from watching attentively. There's body language, there are microexpressions, and unusual behaviour— she explained. —And right now, we're showing possibly all three…

—They aren't like you. I doubt any of them can "read" body language or interpret microexpressions. As for the unusual behaviour, sitting together for a meal, yeah, it surely calls their attention, but that's all— the Head Sorceress assured her.

—I don't know if you're being too naïve or considering them too stupid…

—None of them. You're just paranoid.

—If your dear council decides not to give me a "second chance" and even accuse you of being biased, you'll remember this conversation— Shadow Weaver warned her.

However, just a week later, and despite the sorceresses continuing to sleep together, the council called her for the second trial they had been considering, along with a few selected witnesses.

—Are you ready?— Castaspella asked, trying to hide her nervousness.

—I don't think so— the dark sorceress admitted. —I don't expect good things from the witnesses.

—Don't be so negative. Just… have some faith in yourself.

—You're being too optimistic again— Shadow Weaver accused her, squinting.

Despite her mask, Castaspella had learnt to interpret her voice tone and knew there was mostly fear.

—You don't want to have hope because you're afraid this might go wrong, don't you?— she gently asked.

—I'm not scared!

—There's nothing wrong with that…

—Quit saying those things!— Shadow Weaver hissed, angry now.

—Please. I need you to understand you haven't gone soft or weak just because you've changed!

—Well, it doesn't feel like that…

—Just…— Castaspella began, interrupting herself a moment to take her hands. —Be calm, try to tone down on the condescending speech just a bit, and make sure not to owe me any more daisies— she told her, smiling amusedly.

—You're terrible…

As the Head Sorceress laughed, an acolyte opened the door to the council room.

It was time.

End Notes

Honestly, I would love to explore this concept more, but the idea was just to make a one-shot… but everything has so much potential I could make more…

I don't know. Just not for now because I'm already loaded with projects XD

I hope you enjoyed! Thanks for reading!!

Edit: I got a little brainrot, so let me show you the result…
