Kill The Love

by Xenakis (IceRosesCrown)

Summary

Early morning, grumpy old woman's least favourite day, and plenty of chances to be spiteful about it…

Or

Shadow Weaver being spiteful about Valentine's Day

Notes

You guys, I just HAD to write this!!
I still wanna thank Series-Shpper for brainstorming ideas with me, even if I went with something completely different…

Here's the story: one of my friends is a bartender and is already planning the Valentine's Day cocktails for the bar. So what do I tell you I immediately thought "Oh, SW would get the singles' cocktail just to spite Casta… and because she'd like it more" XD

So yeah…

This is the story!

Also! I'll attach pics of the cocktails at the ending notes!

See the end of the work for more notes

Castaspella woke up early that morning. She was up before eight, and even though she tried to keep quiet, the sound of the shower still woke Shadow Weaver up.

And the grumpy old woman was far from thrilled…

—She can't be for real…— she first groaned, turning around to look at the clock. —Of course she- Ugh!

Shadow Weaver was ready to go back to sleep immediately, and bark at Castaspella if she tried to get her up.

However…

Well, it was February fourteenth, after all…

As she made up her mind, the old woman began walking around the room, looking for some good clothes to put on, and made enough noise that Castaspella could hear her.

—Bea, it's that you!?

—Who else?

—I thought you were still asleep!

—Was! Past tense…

—Sorry…— she apologized, right before closing the shower. —I'll be out in a minute…

Despite Castaspella's claims, she didn't leave the bathroom for another thirty minutes.

Just as Shadow Weaver expected.

So, of course, the woman didn't hesitate to leave the house for a bit, knowing she would return before she was out.

Hence, when Castaspella finally went to the kitchen for breakfast, she was surprised to find her partner sitting at the table with takeout from the nearest coffee shop.

—Ah, there you are— Shadow Weaver smirked, basking in the shocked expression on the young woman's face.

—What the- Did you- Are you really having breakfast without me!?

—You were taking too long…

—Are you serious!? Do you know what day it is today!?

—Um… February fourteenth?— she asked, taking a sip of coffee.

—Yes! And!?

—And Friday…

—It's Valentine's Day! You dumbass!

—Oh, right… The sappy celebration you like so much— Shadow Weaver mocked her, rolling her eyes.

—You had to choose today to be a jerk!?

—What makes you say that? Just because I didn't remember it was…

—I mean because you ditched me to have breakfast on your own!— Castaspella interrupted, fuming.

—Ditched you?— she scoffed, pretending to be offended. —You're the one stalling. Grab your breakfast and join me, already!

—But…

—It's right there— Shadow Weaver cut her, casually pointing to the counter behind her.

That left the young woman speechless.

After a moment, she managed to utter —Wait, you… bought me…

—Your favourite, yes— she completed, dismissively. —Not a big deal.

Castaspella rushed to get the paper bag and smiled brightly as she found a cup of mocha and a chocolate muffin.

—What do you mean "not a big deal"!? I-I was screaming at you! Why didn't you tell me sooner!?

—You didn't give me time, and I thought you'd see it— Shadow Weaver casually replied, clearly far from upset. —And perhaps I was trying to get on your nerves— she then added, smirking.

—Fuck you!— the young woman scoffed, yet still sat in front of her to eat her breakfast. —Just don't ruin this day, please… For me…

—I can't promise anything— she replied, rolling her eyes. —But I'll try to keep it to the minimum— she snickered.

—Should be good enough— Castaspella sighed.

When lunchtime arrived, the young woman was ready to leave and had her best dress on.

—Why so fancy?

—What do you mean?— Castaspella giggled. —Now, where are we going for lunch?

—I don't know… I planned on fixing something quick and going back to work…

—Wait, what!?

—Es, don't tell me you're expecting me to take you somewhere fancy to eat…

—O-of course I was! You know this day is important for me and you said you wouldn't ruin it!

—But…

—I don't need to go anywhere expensive, but can we please go out?— Castaspella pleaded, making her best puppy eyes.

—Ugh, you can't always do that— Shadow Weaver groaned. —Fine. Choose wherever you want and pray there's a table.

—Maybe if you had actually planned to do something with me for the day…

—I hate with all my soul this day, Esmeralda. It's a stupid day to commemorate the most sappy things imaginable…

—I can't believe you're- Whatever, we're going to your favourite place so, with some luck, you're less grumpy for tonight…

—That sounds good. I could eat some keppe…

Shadow Weaver wouldn't admit it, but she was having a good time. She really enjoyed lunch with Castaspella, and she liked seeing her so happy…

Perhaps all this sappy bullshit wasn't that bad.

Castaspella's smiles were worth it.

So… maybe putting a bit of effort wouldn't hurt but how much she hated it!

In any case, Shadow Weaver happened to find a bar that would be doing special cocktails for the night.

Oh, Castaspella would love some special Valentine's cocktails for sure…

Well, that was settled.

The young woman was in a much better mood seeing Shadow Weaver getting ready for the night, actually taking it seriously at last.

But she was in for a surprise still…

As they walked into the bar, the old woman gave her name and they were taken to their table in the backyard under the stars; it was a well-illuminated patio with small tables and lights hanging all around.

Castaspella was completely charmed.

But then it was time to order their drinks, and the thematic cocktails were brought up.

—We'd like a pair of Aphrodites.

—Scratch that— Shadow Weaver interrupted. —I want an Eros.

—Bu-but that's the singles cocktail!

—It's spicy. The Aphrodite is sweet…

—You're just being a bitch again!

—No… I just want the spicy cocktail— she insisted, nonchalant.

—Uh… So, one of each?— the uncomfortable waiter asked.

—Yes— they both replied, Castaspella noticeably angry, while her partner remained aloof.

—Alright. Right away.

—Now, we have to talk…

—Now, I will go to the toilet. You can look after our things while I go…— Shadow Weaver interrupted, smirking smugly as she placed her purse on the table. —I'll be right back and we can talk all you want about anything you want…

—You're- Ugh!

The woman was gone before she could complain, so Castaspella folded her arms and seethed in silence.

She'd give her a piece of her mind when she returned…

However, her peace didn't last as some stranger with a ridiculously colorful attire approached her.

—Well, evening, my good lady…

—And you are?— the young woman inquired, unamused.

—Just an admirer! You caught my eye the second I stepped into this bar…

—We're in the backyard, meaning you must have seen plenty of people between first stepping in here and reaching this part— Castaspella pointed out, rolling her eyes.

—Sharp— the stranger admitted. —Would you be so gracious as to tell me your name?

—Uh… no.

Her deadpan expression should have been enough to get the "admirer" to understand how annoying they were being, but it wasn't.

In fact, they would have insisted if it weren't for the waiter arriving with the drinks and handing her the Aphrodite cocktail.

—Oh, I see… I should have known I had no chance— they chuckled. —Excuse me.

—You're excused…

Castaspella didn't even look at them as they left, only closed her eyes and took a sip of her bright red, bubbly and sweet drink.

It was wonderful!

Enough that she completely forgot about that stranger.

She was beaming happily when Shadow Weaver finally returned to the table.

—Ah, the drinks are here, great.

—Yup! And this is delicious!

—Let's see what this Eros drink is…— she smirked, before sipping a bit of her intense-yellow glass. —Um… not that- Oh, wait— she began, but interrupted herself when she felt the punch of spice. —This is actually better than expected— she laughed.

—Good to know you're enjoying your drink, at least— Castaspella sighed. —Ugh, I should go wash my hands, I forgot. Can you…

—I'll look after our stuff, you go.

The old woman followed her with her gaze, toying with the rosemary decoration of her cocktail while taking small sips, and didn't notice the stranger who approached her.

—Good evening…— they said with a low tone, extending the word to catch her attention. —Excuse my boldness, but you look like someone surrounded by idiots…

With a side-eye, Shadow Weaver uttered —I usually am.

—I imagined… You have an air of strength and importance; certainty you wouldn't be alone if everyone around you weren't absolute morons— they went on, eyeing her long black dress and completely missing the implications of her reply.

—What exactly makes you say that?— she inquired, with a half-hearted laugh. However, before they could reply, she further asked —Oh, because of my face?

—People being appalled by your visage can only be considered imbeciles, I'm sure.

—You're sure of an awful lot of things, aren't you?— Shadow Weaver chuckled, raising a brow.

—Perhaps. May I know your name?

She was absolutely not going to tell her regardless, but right that moment, Castaspella headed back to the table, and she knew a single look could work much better than a negative.

—Hey!

—Oh, you're in trouble— the old woman snickered, exhorting the stranger to look back.

—That jerk is my woman!

—As you said, I'm usually surrounded by idiots, true, but my partner is not one of them— Shadow Weaver casually commented.

—I- But- You have a singles' drink!— they complained, looking both confused and indignant.

—Because she's a little bitch! But she's still my partner, so you can scram now!— Castaspella shooed them.

The women watched as the awfully dressed stranger scurried away, not even sparing them another look, and simultaneously uttered —Good riddance.

—Your timing was perfect. They didn't seem the type to accept a "no".

—They aren't. In fact, they were bothering me while you were at the toilet and only left when they saw my drink!— the young woman huffed, tidying her short purple dress while sitting down.

—Ah, right. They saw my drink and…

—See? Because you're a jerk.

—But you still love me— Shadow Weaver replied, smirking.

—That must be so annoying for you, no?

—Obviously. But it's worth it.

—I just- Ah…— Castaspella sighed. —I like this day. I… like what I feel for you… Perhaps I get a bit demanding, and I'm sorry about that, but…

—Don't apologize— the old woman interrupted. —Look: you're demanding like I'm annoying. I don't mind that. And I certainly hope you don't either.

—No-no. I mean…

—I like how demanding you are because that's how I know what you really want. You don't forfeit what's important to you just because I don't like or want it. You make a point of letting me know how much you want something, and what exactly you expect from me. That's good — she went on.

—Well, you can be annoying with a lot of things, but that can really be pretty stimulating for me— Castaspella admitted, with a fond expression. —I actually think that's your love language. I mean- Like, you hate love, so being a little piece of shit about certain things also means you paid attention to them, which counts for me— she chuckled.

—See? You're smart— she nodded. After taking another sip of her drink, she added —And the sex isn't bad either.

—Isn't bad!?

—What? It's good…

—Excuse you!?

—Fine! It's great! Above expectations! So fulfilling I can't put it into words!— Shadow Weaver mocked her. —Perhaps a reminder when we return home wouldn't be bad…

—Sure— Castaspella laughed, before taking a long sip of her cocktail.

They held each other's gaze for a long moment, between defiant and playful, as if anticipating, until an approaching waiter interrupted —Excuse me, would you like to order something to eat?

—Uh, sure! Want some pizza, maybe?— the young woman asked.

—I think we can go with some tapas instead…

—Oh, that sounds better, actually.

—Right away— the waiter nodded.

—Oh, and these drinks are amazing— Castaspella added. —Please tell the mixologist.

—Sure!— he nodded. While rushing back inside, they could hear him yelling —Hey, Aku! They love your cocktails!

Shadow Weaver was surprised by a burst of dainty laughter and looked back at her partner with such fondness it made her blush to the tip of her ears as soon as she realized.

—Bea? Beatrix…

—Yes?

—You… know you are allowed to feel whatever, right?— she gently asked, reaching for her hand across the table. —I mean it: you don't have to kill the love every time it creeps up on you.

—I… know.

End Notes

Muehehe

I hope you enjoyed that!

So, as promised, here’re the cocktails!

The Aphrodite

The Eros

Anyways! Many thanks to my friend Aku for sharing these pics and giving me such a great idea!
