Brotherly Love

by catrasredemption (dimensionhoppingrose)

Summary

Adam Gray was fairly certain he had the worst luck ever.

It had started with not getting into his first-choice college. He'd had a football scholarship lined up and everything, but it hadn't been enough to overlook his bad grades. Instead, he'd gone to a community college and had worked his ass off for two years to finally transfer to Bright Moon University, only to have his housing fall through at the last minute. But that was fine, he was so lucky, because his sister went to the same school, and had her own off-campus housing with her roommate and best friend! Wasn't that so great?

-OR-

Adam temporarily moves in with his sister and her best friend. There's definitely not anything going on.

(Spoiler Alert: There definitely is)

Notes

I'd like where the idea for this came from. I'm sorry Adam is so dumb. But he's precious.

Adam Gray was fairly certain he had the worst luck ever.

It had started with not getting into his first-choice college. He'd had a football scholarship lined up and everything, but it hadn't been enough to overlook his bad grades. Instead, he'd gone to a community college and had worked his ass off for two years to finally transfer to Bright Moon University, only to have his housing fall through at the last minute. But that was fine, he was so lucky, because his sister went to the same school, and had her own off-campus housing with her roommate and best friend! Wasn't that so great?

Adora wasn't exactly thrilled to welcome her brother into her apartment. But she was terrible at saying no. Which was how Adam found himself unloading his boxes and suitcases into... well, he would have assumed it was Catra's bedroom. It was a two-bedroom apartment, one room per girl was what made sense, right? But the room was practically devoid of life. The bed was perfectly made, like it had been prepared for a guest. But there was no sign of anything that would indicate a person normally lived there.

"Ugh," Adora groaned, dropping the last box in the room. "Do you own enough stuff?"

"I thought I was moving into my own dorm room. Give me a break." Adam ran a hand through his hair, sighing. "Is this really Catra's room?"

Adora turned red, looking away. "Yeah, of course. She just cleaned up for you, so you should thank her when she gets back."

Why was she blushing? She'd gotten so weird about Catra in the last few months. They'd been friends since high school, and had roomed together for their first year at BMU before getting jobs and their own apartment off campus.

"So she' s going to sleep in your room all semester?" It seemed a little weird. Adam had shared beds with friends before, but usually only for a couple days. And he had shared a bed with his sister more than enough times to know she was violent when she slept. Hopefully Catra knew how to duck.

"Y up." Adora suddenly wouldnt look him in the eye. Adam didnt think much of it.

"Great, at least Iwont have to worry about you bringing guys home or anything," he joked as he started unpacking. Adora laughed, a bit loudly.

"Like Ihave time for that. Soccer practice and classes and everything. And Catra wouldnt —yeah. Who has time for that?"

The front door opened, and Catra called, "Adora you have three more packages from Amazon. If you cant make rent this month, Im kicking you out."

"Have fun living alone with Adam, then," Adora said smugly . Catra groaned.

"I forgot about that. Fine , Iguess you can stay . But Iswear to god, if this box is another waffle maker"—

"This one is shaped like a cat!"

"How. How many waf fle makers do you own?" Adam asked nervously. Adora blushed, rubbing the back of her neck.

"Um. four? One for regular waf fles, one for unicorn shaped waffles, one for waffles shaped like a teddy bear head, and now one that makes cat shaped waffles!"

"It is absolutely amazing that Catra hasnt already thrown you out."

The first few weeks were fine. Adam was busy getting settled into college life, meeting people, making friends, learning the layout of the campus. He wasn't in the apartment much – he woke up, rode with Adora and Catra to school, went through his day, then rode home with them and spent the rest of the night in the bedroom, doing homework. Sometimes he joined them for meals. Sometimes the girls went out, and Adam had the place to himself. That was nice.

He was in the dining area one day, collecting a plate full of food, and happened to notice Adora sitting in a corner with Catra and two other people – a young Black man and an Asian woman with pink hair. They were all chatting animatedly except for Catra, who was shoveling down food and reading a book.

"Hey," Adam said cheerfully as he walked over. Adora looked up, giving her brother a smile.

"Hey Adam. Wanna sit?"

"We have an empty chair here," the pink-haired woman said, gesturing at Catra's seat. "Oh, wait, Catra's here."

Catra silently held up a hand to flip the woman off. Adam grabbed an empty chair to sit at the end of the table. "Glimmer, Bow, this is Adam. My brother."

"I don't think you need to add the 'my brother' part," Catra said dryly. Adora ignored her.

"Adam, this is Glimmer and Bow."

"Nice to meet you," Bow said with a wave. "You just transferred here, right? How's it going?"

"Pretty good. Football practice is already kicking my ass, and I'm pretty sure my sociology professor hates me. But finally being here is cool."

t’ s a great school. Glimmer and Icame here for track and field.”

‘m surrounded by jocks,”Catra muttered, still focused on her textbook.

“Jocks who know CPR for when you inevitably choke on your food,” Glimmer said. “So be nice to us.”

“Nah.”

Catra always had a heavy class-load. Adam hadn’t understood how she even survived high school when it seemed like she was drowning in schoolwork.

“Anyway , we were just planning a double da“—

“Day out!”Adora said loudly , cutting Bow off. He looked at her, surprised, then understanding settled in.

“Y eah!Best friend day out. Y ou know. Doing best friend stuf f.”

Catra had finally looked up from work, slightly alarmed, and looked at Adora, who was just smiling. “I should get going,”she said, standing and grabbing her mostly empty plate. “See you guys later . I’m cool with doing whatever.best friend stuf f you want to do.”

She hurried off without another word. Adam watched her go, then went back to his own food. “Best friend stuf f, huh?Sounds fun.”

“Y eah.”Bow chuckled. “It is.”

Adam was mixing batter and trying to decide what waf fle maker to use when Adora’s bedroom door opened, and Catra walked out, yawning. She was wearing one of Adora’s shirts, Adam noticed —it was the stupid unicorn shirt he had bought her for their last birthday. She froze when she saw Adam at the kitchen counter . He just waved.

"What shape do you want your waf fles to be?

"Uh...regular waf fles are fine."

"Cool."

He considered asking about the shirt, but decided not to. Laundry was hard, and Catra was constantly studying, so she was probably out of clothes. She was so small compared to Adora;it was probably easy to steal clothes from her.

"You're cleaning up after yourself,right?The girls are already doing you a favor,the least you can do is clean up ."

"Y es, Mom,"Adam said with a sigh as he walked down the hall to the apartment. "I'm cleaning up after myself. I'm even cooking for them sometimes."Catra didn't trust him around the stove. She'd lived with Adora too long. "Everything is fine."

"God "Marlena knew she hadn't raised an entitled man. "Any word on arrangements for next semester? "

"Still talking to housing."Adam stuck his key in the door , turning it and letting himself in. "Basically , I'm on a waiting list right now and asking every other day isn't going to get me anywhere."

Catra and Adora were sitting on the couch, watching a movie. Actually, they were seated at opposite ends of the couch, very stiffly tucked into the corners. Catra was curled up in a ball, while Adora's legs were sprawled out in front of her.

"What are you guys doing?"Adam asked, looking between them.

"Nothing!"Adora said a little too loudly . "Just watching this movie Glimmer recommended."

"Tell your sister and Catra Isay hi "

"Mom says hi."

"Hi Mom!" Adora called while Catra waved a hand, still not looking at any of them.

"Catra's waving. I'm gonna go, I have homework. Love you."

"Love you too, sweetie. Have a

Adam lowered his phone from his ear, looking at the girls. "You guys are being weird. Is something going on?"

"No," Adora said quickly. "Do you want dinner? Catra was going to make dinner, right Catra?"

"Yup." Catra hauled herself off the couch, heading for the kitchen. "This movie sucks anyway."

It looked like some stupid rom-com – definitely not something Adora or Catra would be interested in. Why would Glimmer recommend it? Did she not know them?

"Dinner sounds great. Thanks, Catra."

"Yup."

It took a moment, but Adam finally managed to place that tone of voice. It was the same tone she'd always used when someone asked her if she was okay after she argued with her mother.

Adora paused the movie and disappeared into her room. Adam hesitated before following Catra into the kitchen. "Hey." He kept his voice low. "Seriously, are you all right? Did you talk to your mom or something?"

Catra scoffed. "Fuck no. I haven't talked to her in over a year."

"Oh." The answer surprised Adam. "Well, that's good. Fuck her."

He knew that he didn't have all the details about Mrs. Weaver, but he also knew she had been a bitch as a vice-principal, and the way Catra acted gave him no reason to believe she was any kinder at home. He'd seen Catra's ridiculous, stringent school schedules.

"Yeah." Catra relaxed a little. "Fuck her."

Adam had his own friends. He wasn't a total loser who could only socialize with his sister. But his lunch schedule never seemed to line up with his friends, so more often than not, he found himself sitting with some combination of Adora, Catra, Glimmer, and Bow. Today it was just Glimmer and Bow, who were talking over one another as they recounted the last track meet. Bow had apparently set a new record in shot put. Glimmer spent about five minutes gushing about it while Bow talked about Glimmer's amazing relay.

"So are you guys dating?" Adam asked when they paused for a breath. They both looked at him, bewildered, then laughed.

"Is it not obvious?" Bow asked, grinning.

"Catra comments on it every two minutes," Glimmer added.

Adam grimaced, rubbing the back of his head. "Yeah, yeah. I'm kind of oblivious sometimes, okay? I'm aware."

"It's all right," Bow assured him. "And yes, we're dating. Have been since high school."

"Oh, cool. So did you like, plan on coming here together?"

"Yeah, we applied to all the same schools." Glimmer popped a fry into her mouth. "We'd only been dating for a year and my parents were all—" she waved her hand, "about me planning my life around a boy. Now Mom won't stop asking when we're getting married."

Adam chuckled. "At least you found your guy early. Mom keeps asking Adora when she's going to get a boyfriend. She's never even tried to date anyone." Bow and Glimmer exchanged uncertain looks. Adam definitely didn't miss that. "Wait, has she? Did she hook up with a guy?"

"Nope," Glimmer said, nudging Bow. "You know her. She's too busy with soccer and trying to pass her classes."

"Feel that. I swear, Catra's the only reason either of us passed high school." It wasn't all their fault. They both had dyslexia, and it was hell. "Don't tell her that, though. It'll—"

"Go right to her head? Yeah." Glimmer rolled her eyes. "She helped with Chemistry once and she won't let me live it down."

Bow elbowed her, smiling. "But she was still nice enough to help you study for your midterms."

"I know, I know." Glimmer grumbled. "I'm going to look at the desserts."

She disappeared off toward the food. Adam turned to Bow, raising an eyebrow. "Do she and Catra even like each other?"

"They've got a special friendship," Bow said, laughing. "Another friend of ours said Glimmer is basically Catra in purple font, and she hasn't forgotten that." Adam choked down a laugh. "They're just really similar and get on each other's nerves. But they've also punched frat boys for one another, so it kind of evens out."

"Why were they punching frat boys?"

"You know, I don't really remember." Bow said slowly. Glimmer returned right on cue with a plate of cookies. "Hey, remember that frat party we went to last year?"

"The one we got thrown out of?"

"The one you and Catra got thrown out of. Adora and I couldn't've stayed."

"Oh, whatever , they deserved it." Glimmer waved him off, offering a cookie to Adam. "Basically , some drunk guy was getting handsy with me while Bow was getting drinks. I don't remember where Adora was, but Catra was there and she just—" She mimicked swinging a fist. "Broke his nose, I think. Then one of his friends tried to jump her , and I got him."

Adam added Don't fuck with Catra to his mental list of ways to lengthen his life span.

Friday night was supposed to be a nice, quiet night. Adora was off doing something, without Catra for once, and Catra had told Adam she was going out. It was a rare time where he got to control the TV ; he'd already hooked up his XBox and was waiting in a lobby for a game to start. All thoughts of wanton destruction went out of his head when he saw Catra leave Adora's room, though.

"Are... Are you wearing makeup?"

It was very subtle, but Adam knew Catra's face. And it definitely looked different. Catra blushed a little, tugging her jacket on over her rather nice dress shirt. "No ."

"You totally are," Adam argued. "Are you going out on a date?"

Catra scoffed. "What are you, my mother?" Okay , that was a little rude. "Keep talking and I'll grab your spare controller and kick your ass."

"In the game or with the controller?"

"I'll leave it to your imagination."

She walked out without another word. Adam stared after her, blinking. She was definitely dressed a little nicer than usual, and wearing makeup. She was going on a date. That was so weird. He couldn't imagine Catra dating anyone. She was basically his sister, though. He also couldn't imagine Adora dating anyone.

Which was what made it so shocking when she walked in a few hours later, also dressed nicely. No makeup, but she had her "nice" jacket on – the one their mother had bought her to wear for special occasions so she wouldn't just wear her letterman jacket everywhere. Adam was just finishing up another game (on a team full of losers, of course), which left him plenty of time to comment on the strangeness of it.

"When did you and Catra get social lives?"

Adora froze, staring at Adam. "Huh?"

Adam waved his hand. "I mean, Catra left wearing makeup, and you're wearing your good jacket – did you have a date too?"

"A date?" Adora laughed nervously. "No, of course not. Who would I even date?"

"I dunno. I mean, you're good looking. Not as good as me, of course –"

"We're literally twins."

"But I'm sure guys find you attractive." That led Adam down another line of thinking. "Wait, guys don't bother you, do they?"

"No, Adam." Adora rolled her eyes. "Did you sit here all night making up stories in your head to get mad over? I just wore this jacket because it's a little colder than usual. Stop reading so much into it."

She made her way to her room, closing the door. Adam went back to his game. Catra slipped in some time later, while he was in the middle of a match, and disappeared into Adora's room as well before he could ask any questions. Girls were so weird sometimes.

Catra guarded her phone very carefully. She never left it anywhere it might be seen, and always angled her screen away, even if she was just playing a game. Adam supposed that was a consequence of her mother's "random phone checks." Fuck Mrs. Weaver.

Adora, on the other hand, lost her phone more often than not. Adam had better things to do with his time than turn the apartment upside down to find the stupid thing.

But here he was, wasting valuable study time to find Adora's phone. Again. Catra was better at this, but she was studying with Glimmer, leaving the twins to fend for themselves.

"This place isn't even that big," he groused as he checked under his own bed for some reason. Weirder things had happened. "How do you keep losing it?"

"I don't know!" Adora called helplessly from her room. "It just gets up and walks away."

It definitely didn't, but whatever. Adam pushed himself up and went to the living room to start tearing the couch apart and—bingo. There it was under a cushion, lit up with a text that had just come in. He started to say he'd found it as he picked it up, but stopped when he saw the text message preview on the lock screen.

Bow

So you're just going to hide things forever? You gotta tell Adam eventually.

Adam stared at it for a long moment before hitting the lock button, shutting the screen down. "Found it, genius. It was in the couch."

"Oh, good!" Adora bounced out of her room, grabbing the phone and hugging her brother. "Best twin brother ever."

"Can't believe it took you this long to realize that."

So she was hiding something. Something from him specifically. What would she hide from except that she was dating someone? Why would she hide it? Adam wasn't going to do anything, except make sure the guy wasn't a total jerk. That was just his right as her brother, though.

"Sparkles is exhausting," Catra announced as she walked through the door. "What did I do in a former life to end up with her now?"

"Oh, you love her," Adora teased, sticking her tongue out. Catra made a disgusted noise.

"Hell no."

Catra would know. They were best friends, after all. They lived together. They shared a bed. Hell, Catra borrowed Adora's clothes. If anyone would know about Adora's personal life, it was Catra. Adam just needed to figure out how to ask her.

"So"…

Catra looked up from her book, raising an eyebrow. Adora was at soccer practice. It was a perfect time for them to talk. Adam just needed to be smooth.

"So," Catra prompted patiently.

"Do you know anything about Adora?" Yeah, he earned the are you fucking stupid look Catra gave him. "I mean like, is she dating anyone?"

"Why are you so obsessed with our dating lives?"

"Because I'm your brother and I'm concerned."

"You are not my brother," Catra reminded him.

"I basically am." Adam waved her off. "Anyway, is Adora dating anyone?"

"Jesus, Adam, I don't know." Catra rolled her eyes, clearly done with the conversation. "Stop being so nosy. If Adora wants to tell you, she'll tell you."

"I know, but—wait." Adam paused, frowning deeply. "She hasn't told you?"

That tripped Catra up for a moment. She blinked a few times, opening her mouth, then closing it again. "What—it doesn't matter."

"But Adora tells you everything." Adam narrowed his eyes. Was Adora hiding things from Catra now? That was insane. They were practically one person. If Adora was dating someone, Catra would be the first person she told. Hell, she'd probably tell Catra before she told the person she was dating! Unless she was purposely hiding it. But why?

Catra palmed Adam's forehead, shaking him out of his thoughts. "You're thinking too loud. It's annoying. Just let it go. Adora's a big girl. She doesn't need her brother looking after her."

"Yeah, but—"

Another light slap. "Let. It. Go," Catra said firmly. "She'll tell you when she's ready."

Adam rubbed his forehead, frowning. "Fine," he grumbled. He didn't like the idea of Adora hiding something like this. She could have secrets, sure, but why would she want to hide that she was dating someone? The only reasons he could think of were all malicious.

Usually Catra was right in line with this kind of thinking. Why was she so unconcerned now? Nothing made sense.

Midterms sucked, and Adam absolutely deserved this party. The music was loud and terrible, but there was plenty of alcohol, and his friends always fun to hang out with. Even if Sea Hawk's shanty dedications to his girlfriend were loud and obnoxious and somehow audible over the beat of the music.

"Adam!"

Glimmer threw her arms around Adam from behind, giggling. He chuckled, turning to face her. "How drunk are you?"

"Soooooo drunk." Bow was fighting his way through the crowd to catch up with his girlfriend. "But this semester has been exhausting."

"Hey Adam!" Bow finally appeared at Glimmer's side, tugging her into a one-armed hug. "How's it going?"

Adam sighed, taking a long sip of his drink. "Fine, I guess. I finally got an on-campus dorm, but I can't move in until next semester, so I'm stuck with Adora and Catra until then."

"Oh my god. They will not shut up about how they can't wait for you to leave," Glimmer said, rolling her eyes. Okay, that hurt a little. Sure, no one liked the arrangement, but it was working out. "All the time it's 'we can't walk around naked if we want, we can't order Indian food because Adam hates it, we can't make out on the couch'—"

"Glimmer!" Bow cut her off in a hushed voice. It took Adam a minute to catch up with everything. They walked around naked? They ate Indian food?

They made out on the couch?

"Wait wait wait wait," he said. Maybe he'd misunderstood. Maybe Glimmer had misspoken. They were both pretty drunk. "What do you mean making out? Like they bring over people they're dating? That's kind of rude."

And he certainly couldn't imagine Adora openly flaunting like that. Bow and Glimmer exchanged looks, eyes wide, like deer caught in headlights.

"Um. You know what? Bow's voice cracked as he spoke. "We have to go. I have an...early appointment."

"Yeah, yeah," Glimmer agreed, nodding. "He has to see the eye doctor person. We should go. Bye!"

"Uh...bye," Adam said slowly as Glimmer and Bow ran away. That was weird. He took another sip of his drink and went back to the couch.

Mermista was sitting with her cheek on her hand, elbow resting on the arm of the couch. Her other hand was holding a drink, and she was staring stonily at Sea Hawk as he sang. Adam sunk to sit on the couch next to her, sighing heavily.

"Hey, Mermista. You know my sister, right?" Mermista hummed an affirmative response. "Is she dating someone?"

Mermista slowly turned her head to look at Adam. He might as well have asked if she could speak to fish. "You're so fucking stupid," she said finally before turning back to Sea Hawk. Adam blinked a few times, and took another sip of his drink.

"Okay."

Adam Gray was an idiot. A dumb, useless idiot.

Really, all the signs had been there, including like three different times when Glimmer or Bow had almost slipped. Duh dy out . What the fuck.

Adora climbed out onto the fire escape to sit with Adam, letting her legs dangle next to his over the edge. "Hey ," she said quietly .

"Hey ." He rested his head against the bars, sighing. It wasn't even a big deal. And it was kind of his fault for bailing on the study group at the last minute and not letting Adora or Catra know he was coming home. They hadn't been expecting him to walk in three hours before he said he'd be back.

Walking out on the couch . Glimmer had mentioned that.

"Are you mad?" Adora asked, jolting Adam out of his reverie.

"What? No, of course I'm not mad, dummy ." It wasn't like Adam had never kissed a guy in his life. He had a preference for girls, sure, but guys were cool too. Besides, half the soccer team in high school had been lesbians. Adam really should have guessed it then. "Why didn't you tell me?"

Adora groaned, bumping her head against the bar. "You know what Catra's like. All secretive about her life and stuff. And I was fine with it, because I wasn't sure what Mom and Dad would think." Adam nearly laughed. Catra was smart as hell, pre-med, and their parents already loved her. She was basically the ideal spouse for Adora. Not that Adora wasn't smart or ambitious, but of course Marlena and Randor would want someone who was good enough for her. And Catra was definitely more than good enough. "And then Mom said you needed somewhere to live, and we really don't use the extra bedroom for much —sometimes Glimmer and Bow sleep over , but mostly it's empty. So we didn't really have a good reason to say no. And Catra would've given you her room anyway . And I wasn't ready to tell you, and it felt weird to tell you but not Mom and Dad, and to ask you to keep it secret from them, so we just... decided to pretend.

We didn't think it would be that hard. But then you started asking about our dating lives — which is super weird by the way —"

"You guys were being weird!" Adam protested. A lot of the behavior made sense in hindsight, but how was he supposed to know? "And you know I would've kept it from Mom and Dad for you."

"I know ." Adora's shoulders slumped. "I guess it was more for me than it was for Catra. I mean, it was definitely for Catra at first, but I just.wasn't ready ."

Adam stared at Adora for a long moment. "I get it," he finally said. "I mean, I don't, but I do. You kind of suck at at sticking up for yourself."

That wasn't quite the right way to put it. She just.wasn't always good at standing up for the things she wanted. If Catra had been pushier about it, Adam was sure Adora would've told him before he moved in. But she never would have done it for herself.

"Do you love her?"

Adora smiled slightly for the first time since she'd climbed out here. She was almost blushing. "Yeah. I do."

"Then that's all that matters, right?" Adam pushed himself up, stretching. "It doesn't matter what Mom or Dad think, or what I think."

"It matters to me."

Adam gently bopped the top of Adora's head. "Well, I approve then. And I know Mom and Dad will too." Marlena would have their entire wedding planned in a month. "Come on, let's go inside."

Catra was sitting on the couch, mostly impassive, as the twins clambered back inside. Adam knew her nervous ticks well enough to recognize her twitching eyebrow . "So?" she said after a moment, looking between them. Adam made a big show of sighing.

"I mean, I guess this is fine, as long as you guys don't constantly make out in front of me or anything." Exaggerated exasperation turned into real horror as something occurred to him. "Wait, have you guys been having sex—"

"Don't!" Catra jolted up off the couch, striding to the kitchen like a woman on a mission. "We're not talking about that. We're not talking about any of that."

Adora laughed, leaning in to whisper to Adam. "Catra's ace."

Adam pulled a confused face. "What do cards have to do with anything?"

"Oh my god," Catra groaned. "Adora, don't tell him anything."

Adora shrugged, heading for the kitchen as well. "What're we having for dinner?"

"Hey!" Adam's voice cracked slightly as he ran after his sister. "You can't just not tell me things!"

"Sure we can," Catra said. She was digging through the cabinets. "You're remarkably oblivious. I thought it couldn't get any worse after that girl tried to ask you out in tenth grade, but amazingly I was wrong."

"—Wait, what girl?"

Catra sighed loudly while Adora shook her head. Adam looked between them, and embarrassed flush sneaking up his neck. "You guys suck," he muttered finally. Catra smiled innocently.

"Dinner?"

End Notes

I just love dumb jock Adam.

Comedy is so not my thing, I'm sorry about all of this lol.
