This one is 5 Chapters. Because even complicated fictional queer teenagers deserve a sexy, exciting adulthood.

Tantalising Restraint

It was the third day that did it. Three days since the rebellion defeated Horde Prime. Three days since the new foursome of the Best Friend Squad rolled laughing down the soft hill, overlooking a renewed Etheria from the edge of Brightmoon, and made a new plan. Now that Horde Prime was gone, how many other planets had been oppressed, chipped and robbed of their magic?

Each time Catra thought of Melog wandering their devastated planet alone before the squad arrived, she could hardly bear it. She was still getting used to expressing such strong feelings outside the simplicity of rage, but it was coming to her slowly and the Squad seemed to understand. These broken planets and their disorientated communities could use allies, and their message of hope felt like a clear mission.

Within hours they were straight back in the palace War Room with the Princess Alliance party, having barely had any time to breathe. A scouting party aboard Darla was proposed - to see how many distressed planets could be found within close proximity to them in their new galaxy.

However, now the adrenaline of the war was ebbing away and other interests were quickly arising.

At first, there was a little disorganisation. Queen Glimmer was now assisted by… a King? Was King Micah now in charge? This was settled quickly by Micah who deferred graciously to his daughter's rule, offering advisorship and support whenever she might need it.

The Alliance Party spent the first night on the floor of the Royal Retiring Room; dragging bedding from rooms and joyfully recounting the details of recent days. The storytelling lasted well into the night, accompanied - of course - by a spirited Seahawk's fireside shanties. As for sleeping, the palace floor was no worse than the camp beds they had endured for weeks. As the laughter grew soft and heads laid down in the dwindling firelight, Adora rolled over - flopping an arm down onto the marble floor. She caught Catra's bright eyes in the growing darkness just a few feet away. They held each other's gaze for a moment, content. Adora smiled gently, and felt Catra's fingers graze her outstretched arm - softly drawing along its length with tantalising restraint.

Adora felt a new kind of tension rise as she realised all at once how much time had passed. The last time she and Catra had felt this connected, they were teenagers. They were young women now, and the pull they felt towards each other was more powerful, more complex - almost urgent.

Catra observed this shift in Adora's thoughts. Satisfied that the bait had been risen to just enough, she broke eye contact and rolled away with a feline yawn. Catra's intentions were almost tangible across the space between them. Old habits die hard, after all.

Adora shifted onto her back and quietly sighed, attempting to dispel the powerful feelings she felt thrumming through her. As her exhausted mind began to settle she found that she was smiling, despite herself. Well, she thought, I guess it's on.

The next two days were a blur. More planning meetings in the War Room, only punctuated for Adora by Catra's eyes sparkling across the table, or her brusque chuckle or the brush of Catra's arm against hers as they leaned over Entrapta's new schematics for Darla's pre-mission upgrades. There was no doubt that Catra was quieter than usual while she considered her new surroundings and finding her place within them. Both were invested in this new mission, and there was still so much to be done for Brightmoon after the Horde occupation.

This activity was also interrupted by the surprising revelation to all on the second day that Scorpia and Perfuma were not present. After a short, panicked search, a note was found in Scorpia's room that revealed their plans to recover from their recent adventures in Perfuma's kingdom and be back soon. Bow, Glimmer and Adora immediately exchanged knowing looks. Catra's shock left her blank for a couple of seconds, but her masking skills resurfaced quickly and she arranged her face to her practiced indifference; colouring only a little under the reassuring squeeze of Adora's hand on her shoulder.

King Micah quickly reassigned Scorpia's room to Catra, eliciting an involuntary "Oh!" from them both.

They couldn't argue with the logic - King Micah was honouring Catra as a functional member of the Brightmoon Royal Court by granting her quarters while they worked on the mission. It had occurred to neither Catra nor Adora that they would be separated since returning to Etheria - least of all by walls. Adora spied Glimmer and Bow stifling a giggle as they turned from the room back into the hallway.

"And where will you be sleeping tonight, Bow?" Adora teased under her breath as she caught up to them, making Glimmer blush.

"Strangely enough, no-one has ever asked me that, Adora," replied Bow discretely with only a slightly smug undertone, before peeling off towards the War Room once again.

Adora frowned and Glimmer grinned. "Don't worry," she said quietly, "you're only down the hall from each other. There shouldn't be a problem."

But there was.

That night, Adora walked Catra to her room under the watchful eye of the palace guards. It was clear that slipping in and out of rooms unnoticed would not be an option. However, Catra seemed less frustrated by this obstacle than Adora, if anything Catra seemed mildly amused. Catra's taste for power over Adora had not completely evaporated, but had certainly morphed into something different.

There was no more rough-housing as they walked, replaced instead by something easier in their connection that neither could directly identify at the time, but any onlooker could see was a growing trust. The teasing was lighter and had lost it's overly-competitive edge, which seemed to suit both of them. For two nights their rolling conversation slowed as they approached Catra's room, glancing at each other with a slow-burning intensity. Each time Adora held the door open for Catra, she walzed slowly through with a carefully chosen smouldering look, leaning on the doorframe for a moment to measure the effect on Adora's face.

The second time, Adora took a deep breath and crossed her arms, leaning on the other side of the door post.

"Are you tired?" she offered as she rested against the polished wood.

"Not really." Catra relaxed into her trademark smirk with a shrug. "Sitting at tables and planning things is hardly a taxing day." She paused. "Well, maybe it is for you princesses, but it certainly isn't for me."

Ah, there she is, thought Adora. I've missed that gloat.

"No, not for me either," she said breezily. She allowed a beat. "Maybe tomorrow we should go for a run."

Catra's mood broke. "A run?" she repeated, unimpressed. "A run? Where? What does that even mean?"

"Nothing." Adora laughed and stepped into the hall, spinning on her heel to face Catra's raised eyebrow. "I just think some physical activity could do us both some good."

Pleasant surprise crossed Catra's face as Adora began to walk away at a leisurely pace. "Oh really? And 'a run' was the best you could come up with?"

Adora glanced over her shoulder with a twinkling eye. "I'm open to other suggestions!" she sang out to the corridor and the unmoving guards as she walked.

Catra cackled but felt the heat rise in her cheeks at Adora's words. "You're an idiot!" she called after her.

"I know!" came the distant, comfortable reply, before the soft click of a closing door.

Catra exhaled and closed her own door. Walking towards the huge pile of cushions Scorpia had left behind, she dragged a hand over her face with a groan.

How dare she? thought Catra as she threw her small grey pyjamas across the room in irritation. How dare Adora suggest something like that and just casually stroll off? What the hell am I supposed to do now?

Melog had taken to prowling the palace grounds at night, which only bothered Catra because she wanted comfort. She knew she could throw open a window and summon them, but her stubbornness held her back as she began to brood. It had now been two days since they'd beaten Horde Prime but it had also been two days since the kiss. THE kiss. In Catra's head that kiss had become gigantic.

She dropped onto the ridiculous pillow pile and closed her eyes. If there was a bed under there, she couldn't be bothered to find it now. The truth was that Catra was exhausted from the fight or flight nature of the past few months - but she also burned, stronger than ever, for that dumb, big-eyed girl a few rooms away. With an exasperated growl, she wriggled out of her clothes and flung them to the floor.

This whole thing was unacceptable. She glanced at the door and firmed her resolve. Tomorrow, she would have to speak to Glimmer.

The next morning, breakfast had turned into a buffet-style affair. There were so many guests moving in and out of the palace, it was impossible to get everyone to sit down for a meal at a given time. Catra surveyed the dining room and carefully sidled up to the young queen as she contemplated the three tureens of pink eggs in front if her.

“Hey Sparkles,” Catra began lightly, “I have a request.”

“Oh, hi Catra,” Glimmer replied distractedly, finally selecting a tureen and digging a serving spoon in. “What’s up?”

“I need you to… uh…” Catra paused, “Hm. How do I say this? I need the guards on our corridor to go away. This evening.”

Glimmer looked up at Catra’s face and burst into laughter. Catra whipped her head around in panic and gripped Glimmer’s elbow to draw her closer.

“Shut up! It’s not funny,” Catra hissed, “We feel watched and it’s weird. Can you just send them somewhere else tonight?”

Glimmer was still giggling. “You and Adora really need to work on your communication.”

Catra’s ears flicked up in surprise. “What do you mean?”

Glimmer wiped an eye. “Adora fixed this for you already. She came to see me about it first thing.”

“She did?”

Glimmer sighed “Yeah, I didn’t realise Dad had set the guard on that corridor. I think he’s a little wary of you because of your history with the Horde, but it’ll pass. Don’t take it personally. He’s still figuring out how to be here and not on Beast Island.”

Catra considered this. “Well, I can relate.” She stared at the empty breakfast plate in her hands. She felt a little brighter. “Thanks, Sparkles.”

“Happy to help. Frankly I’m amazed it took you both two days to talk to me about it. You two must be tying yourselves in knots,” said Glimmer with a wink as she returned her attention to the serving table. Catra offered a grunt to hide her mild embarrassment but ambled away, replacing her clean plate on the stack. Her appetite disappeared as a quiet glow of excitement took over.

The day passed uneventfully, but neither Catra nor Adora were on top of their tasks. Their awareness of each other heightened steadily as the hours dragged, reaching a fever pitch by the afternoon that was almost painful. Their eyes followed each other in and out of every room, noticed primarily by Melog, who flicked their tail from side to side with amusement.

Eventually, Adora stepped out into the palace garden to get some air and break the mild paranoia that everyone could sense the desire radiating from her anytime Catra was near. Catra followed surreptitiously at a distance and watched her slump onto a rose-engraved bench, slowly massaging her temples. She had always liked to watch Adora, and Adora was blissfully unaware of how much Catra had secretly observed over the years from concealed vantage points.

After Adora had left the Horde for Brightmoon and made it clear she wouldn't be returning, the memories of Adora's every mundane gesture had felt like a crushing poison Catra had desperately tried to eke out of herself. Now as Catra watched her again, each one felt like an endless source of fascination, and for the first time she let go of her reflex to despise herself for it.

Catra's blue and gold eyes surveyed the pastel skyline; it was dusk. They would never make it to dinner, she thought; it was time to put Adora out if her misery.

Catra quietly turned back inside and addressed the assembled Alliance in smooth tones. "Hey, I didn't sleep much last night and I'm not feeling great, so I'm going to turn in early if it's all the same to you guys."

"Oh! You don't want supper?" Hawkeye began with a note of disappointment. "I have recalled some untold tales of daring-do especially..?" but Mermista cut him off with an elbow to the ribs, looking at Catra with clear acknowledgment.

"Sure, that's fine, we're all good here. Sleep well!" she firmly interjected, as she steered Seahawk away.

Adora appeared in the doorway. "I'll walk you up," she offered, evenly. "I could use an early night too." Catra turned, and finally released the deep, fanged smile she had been holding in all day as their eyes met.

“Okay,” Catra said casually as she walked towards the door, sliding her hand into Adora’s as she passed to lead her out. Adora - still unused to Catra initiating affectionate contact - felt her breath stop, but she went willingly.

They wordlessly walked hand in hand, unrushed - climbing the grand stairway that led to their corridor. For a few minutes it was like the past three years had never been, even though everything about where they were headed now confirmed that it had. Before they knew it, they had passed Catra’s door - the hall now empty of guards - and arrived at the threshold of Adora’s room.

Adora paused with hand on the doorknob and looked at Catra, a hint of incredulity in her face.

“Are you sure?” she whispered, convinced that she had never felt more vulnerable in her life than she did in this moment. She knew statistically that was probably not true, but all thoughts of her She-Ra status, adventures and endeavours had momentarily left her. This was the point of no return. Whatever happened next had the power to change everything between them.

What Adora had not yet grasped was that this change was already in motion; ever since that moment when Catra cradled the unconscious Adora beneath the spitting, exploding energy of the Heart of Etheria and breathed “Stay!” into her chest.

Catra had gone over those events so many times in her mind over the past few days and nights, and come to the same conclusion each time - that loving Adora was inevitable.

And so, Catra was ready.

She gently squeezed Adora’s hand, speaking low. “This is the only thing I have ever been sure of.”

Adora blinked and exhaled, gratified. “Okay then.” She pushed open the door, allowed Catra to pass, and closed it behind them.

Catra's eyes adjusted rapidly to the low light and she took a look around. Huh, she thought. Definitely a more of a Princess room than mine. The door had barely snapped shut when she felt Adora's fingers slide under the belt above her tail and pull her backwards. Catra twisted towards her in surprise as they crashed into each others' arms.

"Whoa! Adora!" Catra laughed as Adora pressed her face into Catra's shoulder, her chest heaving, arms clasped tight around Catra's waist. Catra threaded her fingers into the hair at the nape of Adora's neck and dropped her voice lower in Adora's ear. "Hey! Hey, relax. Take a breath."

They held each other for a long moment. Adora's breathing became less laboured, and she raised her eyes to Catra's. "Sorry. I'm just so relieved. I've been going crazy for three days."

Catra smiled. “Me too.”

“Really?”

“Are you serious? Of course I have.”

Adora leant forward, her face barely an inch from Catra’s. “Good. Because I can’t wait anymore.”

Catra felt a wave of excitement roll in her stomach. Moving her hands to Adora’s face, she sighed with satisfaction. “Then kiss me.”

Adora pressed her parted lips to Catra’s, and they fell into the kiss like lungs reaching for oxygen. Catra felt Adora’s tongue gently slide into her mouth, sending both surprise and pleasure rippling through her as she reciprocated with growing urgency. Within a few minutes the world around them had dissolved and all that mattered was this present moment, their bodies pressed together as the heat between them grew. A rhythm emerged - their lips and tongues slid over each other again and again… the kiss seemed to go endlessly deeper until neither could tell who was doing what anymore.

Presently, Catra realised she’d almost forgotten to breathe and gently released Adora’s lower lip. For a few moments they relaxed their grip on each other, breathing heavily, eyes closed, heads resting together. Catra’s eyes flicked open as she arrested the lapel of Adora’s jacket, pressing Adora gradually backwards and pinning her playfully against the door as she began to kiss her again, this time more slowly.

Kissing Catra was more sensual than Adora could have fantasised, even in the past few days. As Adora felt Catra’s hands trace the lines of her body for the first time, part of her brain began to quietly explode with the realisation she could do the same. Her hands moved purposefully to Catra’s buttocks and squeezed, causing Catra to pull back with a throaty chuckle.

In reply, Adora pulled Catra’s hips more firmly into hers. “Too long, honestly.”

Catra nodded slowly in Adora’s arms, the ghost of a smirk playing on her face. “Damn, I knew it. We could have been doing this as cadets, you know!”

Adora looked thoughtful. “I don’t know about that. Maybe we got close a couple of times back then…” Adora said, searching for confirmation in Catra’s face and finding none. She was clearly listening attentively but Adora sensed a flicker of anxiety in Catra’s body despite her neutral expression. Adora decided to continue, “But when I think over the whole thing, I think we got here as fast as we could.”

“You mean you did.” Catra quietly corrected, lowering her eyes and resting her hands on Adora’s jacket lapels again. Her voice cracked a fraction. “I always knew. I was just waiting for you to catch up.” Catra raised her chin a little but kept her eyes lowered. Adora knew what this meant and felt a pang of regret.

Here she was holding this beautiful, wild girl who she felt she knew better than anyone, but in reality Adora was having to get to know all over again. Adora couldn’t change the past, but she didn’t want Catra to feel small; she wanted her to feel safe.

“Yes,” Adora admitted, running her fingers soothingly along the back of Catra’s arms. “We have established that I was the dumb one here. But.” Adora tipped Catra’s face to hers, meeting her eyes. “I wasn’t ready, and I’m sorry. I hope you know that I’m ready now.”

Catra smiled resignedly. “Better late than never, I guess.”

“Yeah.” Adora smiled in reply, planting a long, heartfelt kiss on Catra’s mouth before moving her lips gently to Catra’s ear as they embraced. “Thank you for loving me, Catra.”

She felt Catra's breath catch and Adora knew she had finally said the right thing. Their lips found each other and the world disappeared again.

Eventually Adora lifted Catra up. Catra wrapped her legs around Adora's waist, their lips barely breaking contact. Each kiss felt hungrier than the last as Adora carried Catra slowly to the bed.

Pulling back slightly, Catra slipped the elastic out of Adora's ponytail and dropped it behind her, watching Adora's hair cascade deliciously around her shoulders.

Adora bristled as the band hit the floor. "Don't pretend like you don't have a hundred of them somewhere." Catra admonished.

Adora laughed. "Shut up," she said, as she pressed her face into Catra's neck and lowered her to the mattress.

Adora allowed her lips to linger beneath Catra's ear and Catra let out a shiver of anticipation under the pleasurable weight of Adora's body. "I think we need to be wearing less clothes."

"Agreed," breathed Adora, straddling Catra as they both sat up. Catra's loosened the belt that bound Adora's jacket, which also fell to the floor as Catra peeled it from her shoulders. Suddenly Adora whipped her head up and looked round the room.

Catra froze. "What's wrong?"

"Did I close the windows?"

A frown creased Catra's forehead as her fingers teased the top of Adora's waistband. "Why?"

Adora turned back to Catra a little nervously, "Well, I suspect we might make noise."

Catra fell back onto the mattress in mock exasperation. "Oh, Adora, quit worrying. No-one cares!" Rolling onto her front between Adora’s legs, she rested on her elbows and looked coyly over her shoulder. “I need you to unzip me. Now.”

Adora’s breath suspended for the second time that night as she looked down at Catra, reaching for the zip beneath Catra’s collar. As she pulled it down Adora felt Catra watching her from the corner of a blue eye. The zip fell open and Catra quickly unhooked the collar buttons. As the garment slipped off, Adora tentatively rested her hand on the skin of Catra’s bare back - feeling her breath rise and fall, spellbound and still.

Catra sensed the moment and waited. Everything was familiar and yet everything was new. There were bound to be moments like this where the knowledge of all they had been through collided with the choice they were making now and interrupted the flow of things. Catra glanced over her shoulder again, and caught Adora’s eye. The spell broke, and Adora began to move again.

Within a minute, the rest the clothes were on the floor, and a hush seemed to descend upon the room.

Everything felt tender now, electric and exposed. Lips, hips and limbs all tangled together, the new lovers explored each other gradually - drinking each other in.

Catra's hands caressed Adora's face and luxuriated in running her fingers over the shape, before sliding them gently into her hair. Propped up on one elbow, Adora ran her other hand down the length of Catra's body, enjoying feeling Catra respond to her touch with a low purr. Adora felt Catra's tail wrap around her left calf and something seemed to settle between them.

Moving carefully, Adora rested a thigh between Catra's legs and quickly realised what she wanted as her breath became more ragged. Adora slid her hand down beneath her thigh to where Catra was wet, moving with a light touch until she found what she was looking for. As her mouth hovered over Catra's she felt Catra's first gasp.

"There?" Adora murmured.

"Yes," Catra breathed, blinking slowly.

Adora began to make small, rhythmic circles. "Like that?"

"Yes!" Catra inhaled sharply. "Like that!"

Catra's breathing started to rise in pace and after a few minutes Adora began to feel a little pleased with herself. I'm nailing this!

"Focus, Adora," Catra panted, with humour.

"Sorry," Adora said, shaking her head and resuming with a little more purpose, "Better?"

Catra gasped again, "Yes!" Her back began to arch. "Keep going… like that!"

Adora obliged and moved her lips to Catra's neck again, sucking the skin steadily in time. This seemed to have the effect of sending Catra up a level; she closed her eyes and began to groan, her hands moving from Adora's body to grip the sides of the narrow mattress.

"Don't stop!" Catra cried softly, her knuckles white.

Then, "More!… Yes… Yes!"

Catra's eyes flew open.

"Adora!"

Pleasure exploded in Catra's body with more intensity than she imagined possible. Adora felt Catra's muscles contract and release beneath her as the sensation powerfully rolled and then ebbed away.

Catra's breath evened and she closed her eyes again, with a smile. Adora stared at Catra in wonder and fascination, retrieving one of her hands from the edge of the mattress and discovering with amusement that the claws had come out.

"Oh!" She exclaimed softly, manoeuvring herself to the edge of the bed to take a look. Lo and behold, as she swung her head down to inspect, she spied five puncture marks cutting through the bed sheet into the mattress. Running her finger gingerly over them, she glanced wide-eyed at Catra, "Oh wow."

Claws now retracted, Catra covered her face with her hands and began to giggle uncontrollably beside her.

Adora also began to laugh. "I mean, you know the joke I have to make."

Catra's giggling slowed "Adora, no."

"It's too good not to."

"If you do, I'll kill you." Catra started to sit up, but Adora wrestled her back down.

"You tried that already," Adora replied smugly, bringing her face close to Catra's. "Well, there's no hiding this from the palace now…"

"URGH, why are you like this?!"

"That's the cat out of the bag!" Adora finished victoriously, pinning Catra to the bed and laughing to herself.

"Gross." Catra shook her head. "This must be how Mermista feels about dating Seahawk."

"Hey!" Adora yelped.

"You deserved it." Catra replied matter-of-factly. "Besides, I can think of better uses for your mouth than telling bad jokes."

“Oh really?” Adora settled back on top of Catra again. She relaxed her grip on Catra’s wrists and slipped her hands into Catra’s, interlacing their fingers. Adora leaned forward and lingeringly kissed Catra’s forehead. “Like this?”

Catra’s face softened as she wrapped her arms and legs around Adora. “Mm. Better.”

They held each other in the quiet of the moonlit room for a while, Adora’s ear pressed against Catra’s purring chest. Eventually, Adora stirred and looked up at Catra’s glowing eyes. “How are you feeling?” she asked.

There was a pause. “I don’t know,” Catra said slowly. “Not in a bad way, in a really good way. I just don’t know how to describe it.” She paused again. “It’s like… I’ve thought about this so many times..”

“This specifically?” Adora interrupted, indicating the bed.

Catra smiled despite herself, “I wasn’t finished, dummy.”

“Sorry,” Adora closed her eyes and shook her head. “Continue.”

Catra took a breath. “Yes, this specifically.” She smirked. “And other things too.” Catra reflexively moved her hand to cover Adora’s mouth anticipating the next interruption, with a pointed look.

“Adora, I’m trying to answer you properly. Just shut up for a second.” Catra paused again and dropped her hand from Adora’s mouth, smoothly caressing her earlobe instead. Adora rested her chin on Catra’s chest and waited.

“I thought about this but also about us being together and I didn’t know if it would ever happen like this.” Catra began again, “Most of the time I didn’t think it could. I… there were so many times when I couldn’t let myself…” Catra swallowed and tried again. “After everything that happened and everything I did, I couldn’t picture it anymore. And now we’re here, and we both want to be here and I'm so… happy, I guess? It doesn't feel like a good enough word but I can't think of better one. It's like I'm so happy, but this…" Catra gestured between them, "… is also a big deal and I think I feel the weight of it."

"Overwhelmed?" Adora quietly offered. "Is that the word?"

"Yeah, that works," Catra agreed, and allowed her eyes to wander to the ceiling. She sighed, resting her hands on Adora's shoulders. "I'm glad we finally got here, but it's a lot to think about."

Adora nodded a little. "Yeah."

Catra's focus returned to Adora's face. "What about you?"

"Me?"

"I mean… how are you feeling?"

Adora grinned. "I'm great."

Catra raised her eyebrows. "That's it?"

"I think everything you've said is important and I'm glad you said it, but I've been dying to get my hands on you for days. And now you're here and I keep wanting to pinch myself because I can't believe it. I didn't realise how in love with you I was for so long and then it hit me all at once and now that's the only thing I can think about."

The gears in Catra's brain ground to a halt as she processed Adora's words. She was tiptoeing up to using the word 'love' again so carefully, but Adora seemed inclined to no such caution. Perhaps that wasn't a bad thing? Catra blushed and gave a small smile. "Okay, I suppose that makes sense."

"I know we've been through so much and there's still a lot to say, but right now I'm just here with you. And it's enough."

They held each other's gaze, enjoying the warmth of it. "Just one thing though." Added Adora, a note of flirtation in her voice.

Catra looked suspicious. "Yes?"

"When you said 'And other things too'… what did you have in mind?" Adora asked, running her hand along Catra's thigh.

Catra's eyes widened a little and her lips parted. Adora had surprised her a lot tonight… and she wasn't mad at it.

"Wouldn't you like to know?" she replied impishly, regaining a little of her composure. Adora pulled herself level with Catra, their faces inches apart, and Catra looped her arms around Adora's neck, bringing her lips to Adora's ear.

"We'll need to trade places to get started on that."

Now it was Adora's turn to feel a shiver of excitement. She obediently moved to the side of Catra, looking up expectantly. Catra laughed, shifted her weight over and lifted herself up to allow Adora to wriggle beneath her. Holding their eye contact, Catra lowered herself onto Adora's body, straddling her.

"So eager, Adora," Catra sighed, her tail flicking meditatively from side to side as she teased strands of hair out of Adora's face. "It's almost like you've also thought about this."

"No comment," replied Adora, sliding her hands up Catra's back and leaning upwards to meet her lips. This kiss was long and slow. Both of them felt their bodies waking up again, and almost unconsciously Catra's hips began to move, but then she stopped.

Pulling away only slightly, Catra cradled Adora's face a moment. "Actually, I have an idea."

Catra climbed down and stood at the foot of the bed, slipping her hands behind Adora's knees and pulling her toward her. Adora, bemused but willing, allowed herself to glide down the bed until her backside hit the end of the mattress. At this point she sat up.

"What are you up to?" she asked.

"Lie back," said Catra enigmatically as she lowered herself to her knees before Adora. Adora did as she was told and Catra rested her shoulders under Adora's legs - one hand gripping her hip, the other parting the velvety flesh between her thighs. At last, Adora realised was happening. Her eyes flew wide in shock and delight as Catra's tongue slid over her.

"Oh!… Wow." she started. "Catra."

Catra squeezed her hip in response, but did not lose momentum - skilfully pressing her tongue into Adora.

Adora's chest began to rise as she panted and gasped, a new pleasure spreading generously throughout her body. She grasped the bedsheets above her in a bid to stem the strength of the sensations she was now experiencing but found it pointless. Still she held on, squeezing her eyes shut, completely unconscious of the fact that she had begun to softly glow.

"Don't transform!" she suddenly heard from her naval. She looked up to see Catra's startled eyes hovering above her legs.

Adora laughed outright, and the glow faded a little. "Don't panic, I have it under control."

"You sure?"

"Absolutely," soothed Adora. "Also… don't stop."

Reassured, Catra lowered to her knees again. “So I can assume you’re enjoying it?” she asked curiously.

“Oh, yes,” Adora replied with enthusiasm.

Catra smoothed her hands from Adora’s hips to her stomach, massaging the muscles. “How much?”

Adora groaned lightly. “Very much.”

“Do you want more?” Catra asked quietly as her lips grazed the insides of Adora’s thighs.

“Yes!” Adora whispered as anticipation shot through her, but then she suddenly realised what that question really meant and everything in Adora stopped. The glow dimmed.

In her mind’s eye, Adora could see Catra on the terrible night they took the Failsafe from Mystacor. She could see Catra’s streaming eyes, challenging “What do you want, Adora?” as Adora faltered under the weight of her self-imposed responsibility. Adora could see again the hurt in Catra’s face as she turned away and disappeared with Melog, leaving Adora screaming on the ground.

Adora hoisted herself up on her elbows. “Catra?”

Catra paused her progress, wiped her mouth and raised her head. Adora sat up and reached for her. Catra rose a little and rested her hands on Adora’s waist, waiting. Adora’s fingers moved from Catra’s jawline into her cropped hair, drawing their faces close.

“I want you, Catra.” Adora breathed. “I want you.”

The silence held. Darkness obscured both their expressions, but Adora could feel Catra’s breath on her face as she waited for her response.

Presently, Catra placed a hand on Adora’s. “Say that again,” she whispered.

“I want you, Catra.” Adora repeated without hesitation.

“Again.” Firmer this time.

“I want you.” Adora’s lips grazed over Catra’s. “More than anything.”

Catra sunk forward into Adora’s kiss and Adora caught her. They clung together and let whatever pride they had held onto to fall away. Relief and desire washed over them, and as their breathing became heavier Catra broke away, her hands grasping behind Adora’s knees again to tip her backwards. Adora barely had time to lower herself before she felt Catra’s breath on the top of her thighs. A thrill passed through her as Catra’s tongue made contact once more.

Catra was now on a mission, lapping at Adora in long, slow runs, causing Adora’s ecstasy to soar. Each groan went deeper as Catra slowly applied more pressure, and Adora’s glow returned - stronger, seemingly pulsating. Catra began to pick up speed, and Adora felt a swell of sensation approaching - something that she wasn’t sure she needed when their evening started, but now she was sure she wanted.

“Don’t stop, Catra!” Adora exclaimed, and she felt Catra’s hands run to her stomach again, resting her thumbs at the base of Adora’s ribs. As Catra closed her eyes and pressed even further in, Adora tilted her pelvis upward and felt herself tip over the edge. Clamping her hands to her forehead, she cried out as climax streamed through her system, burning brightly through every nerve in her body before subsiding to a dull glow.

Catra’s hands slipped from Adora’s body while she caught her breath. Wiping her mouth again, Catra stood and turned to the windows, running her hands contentedly through her hair. Silhouetted naked against view of the palace grounds, bathed in silver, Adora did not believe she had seen, or ever would see, anything as beautiful. Adora gradually levered herself up from the bed and stepped behind Catra, pulling her close. Catra leant back into Adora and closed her eyes.

“I think I’m finally tired.” She said.

“I think you should be after that,” Adora responded.

Catra took a moment to enjoy the compliment. “You came really hard.”

“Why would you expect anything different?” Adora murmured into Catra’s hair.

Catra turned a little towards Adora. “What was with the light show?”

Adora shrugged. “Honestly, I don’t know. It was definitely magic, but I wasn’t expecting it. I’m getting good at summoning it when I need She-Ra but that’s only maybe the third time it’s shown up on it’s own.”

“And She-Ra wasn’t there?”

“I mean… the connection was there, I was aware of her, but I didn’t ask for her, so she didn’t appear.” Adora considered. “It’s to do with the strength of my feelings I think, and what I care about. And I care a lot about you.”

Catra nuzzled into Adora’s neck. “Well, as I’ve said before, never a dull moment with you. Quite literally this time.”

“Now who’s making the bad jokes?”

Catra smiled in satisfaction and stepped across the room to the water pitcher, where two glasses waited. She waved one at Adora. “You were actually prepared.”

Adora turned back to the bed with a smirk, smoothing the sheets. “First thing I did after I spoke to Glimmer this morning.”

Catra sniggered as she poured the water and wound her way back to the bed. “I’m not sure that’s the flex you think it is. But I like your confidence.”

They sat on the mattress edge together, side by side, sipping. The dullness of sleep was creeping in at the edges of their consciousness and neither felt compelled to speak. They rolled beneath the sheets, fitting easily into an embrace they had always known - Catra’s head resting beneath Adora’s chin - but for the first time Catra draped herself flush against Adora’s body. Adora wrapped her arms around Catra and they both took a deep breath.

“This felt like a good start tonight.” Said Adora quietly.

“Save your compulsion to assess situations for the War Room.” Replied Catra with an ear flick and a drowsy smile.

Adora chuckled weakly. “I only meant to say that I had a great time.”

“I know,” Catra shifted a little to look up briefly at Adora, almost shy. “I did too.”

“Good.” Adora said, softly kissing the top of Catra’s head.

Finally, they relaxed into each other’s arms, and gradually drifted away into dreams.
