Summary

It's Catra and Adora's first Christmas together, and all Catra wants to do is spend the day with her girlfriend and only her, but a Christmas gathering makes that kind of difficult. Pairings: Catra/Adora.

Notes

Hey everyone! It's been awhile but I'm back with a new fic. I hope y'all enjoy. Been awhile since I wrote a Catradora story so I hope it's good. :)

The smell of Christmas filled the air and Adora could not be happier. Ever since she was in the horde, she was never given the opportunity to experience holidays or even birthdays like she could now. She was always trapped under Shadow Weaver and was never allowed to have any real fun. But now, after leaving the horde and discovering who she really is as She-Ra, and making so many friends along the way, she was finally free from her prison and could do whatever she felt like doing. And ever since Glimmer and Bow explained the basics of what Christmas was and how you celebrate it, she felt like throwing the biggest Christmas party to celebrate that freedom, and the start of her new life with Catra.

Yes, ever since her and Catra became an item, both of them decided they needed a place to call their own instead of living in the castle with Glimmer. So they bought a little house out in the woods not far from the castle grounds. It was quaint and peaceful, and gave Catra and Adora the privacy they wanted.

Humming Christmas tunes to herself, Adora finished putting on some last minute touches to the Christmas cookies she was baking, while she waited for Catra to wake up.

Catra slowly opened her eyes and let out a yawn, extending an arm to wrap around the sleeping frame of her girlfriend only to find Adora's spot vacant. Now more awake, she sat up in bed, looking around their bedroom for any sign of Adora when the faint smell of cookies baking caught her attention, prompting a sigh to fall from her lips.

Catra was all too aware of the upcoming party that would commence in a few hours, and she was not looking forward to it one bit. The thought of having so many people coming over and being forced to socialize with them sent a shiver down Catra's spine. All she wanted to do was spend the holidays alone with Adora, but when Catra saw how happy planning this big get together was for her girlfriend she just didn't have the heart to put a stop to it.

Throwing back the covers, Catra hopped out of bed and walked out into the hallway, heading down the stairs where she laid eyes on Adora setting out freshly baked cookies on the counter. Unable to hold back the smirk that spread across her face, Catra made her way into the kitchen, gently but firmly wrapping her arms around Adora's waist and pulling her close. "You're up early."

"I had to finish getting everything ready for today." Adora replied with a grin, leaning forward to kiss Catra quickly while gently cupping her face with her hands. "We do have people coming in a few hours, after all."

A look of annoyance crossed Catra's face but she tried to hide it by maintaining her grin, slowly reaching forward to play with Adora's hair which was already up in her classic ponytail. "I have a better idea. We cancel the party, and you, me, and your cookies head upstairs to our bedroom and we have our own party. Just the three of us."

Laughter left Adora as she shook her head, a grin manifesting across her amused expression. "As tempting as that sounds, it's a little late to cancel. We have princesses coming here from far away. Glimmer and Bow are coming. We can't turn them away like that."

"It was worth a shot." Catra managed a small grin, reaching over to swipe a cookie from the plate. Deep down, she was annoyed at Adora for actually going through with this, but she wasn't about to admit her true feelings out loud. Not when she could clearly see how happy it was making Adora. Catra sighed, knowing she would just have to suck it up for a couple of hours and hope time moves quickly so this day would come to an end. She wasn't sure how long she could endure being around everyone else for an extended length of time.

Catra had come a long ways since her princess hating days back when the war was going on, and she had even managed to become good friends with Bow and Glimmer too. But that didn't mean she was ready to befriend every princess in Etheria quite yet. There was only one princess she wanted to be with today and she feared Adora would be too busy talking with everyone else to even notice her. Her ears fell a bit at the realization as she finished off her cookie and grabbed another one.

"Catra! Try and not eat all the cookies, okay? We need some for our guests." Adora gently pushed Catra towards the living room, needing Catra out of the way so she could finish up before everyone arrived. "Now please go sit while I finish getting everything ready. This won't take too much longer."

Catra sighed to herself and headed towards the couch, plopping down lazily on it as she stared at the roaring fire in front of her, dreading the first wave of visitors that would arrive.

Soon, there was a knock at the door just as Adora was finishing things up in the kitchen. Her eyes went wide with glee as she eagerly ran towards it, opening the door to reveal Bow and Glimmer. “Merry Christmas!” Glimmer greeted enthusiastically as she hugged Adora. Bow quickly joined in on the hug too, nearly suffocating Adora as she hugged them back with just as much excitement radiating throughout her body.

“Merry Christmas everyone! You’re the first ones to arrive. Please, have a seat.” Adora led them to the living room as Catra looked up to see Bow and Glimmer heading her way. Glimmer looked like she wanted to run and hug Catra but Catra quickly dismissed her.

“Keep your hands to yourself, Sparkles. Also, what the hell are you wearing?” Noticing the Santa hats on top of both Glimmer and Bow, Catra arched a brow at this. She thought they looked ridiculous.

“They’re Santa hats, silly! They’re to help you get more into the Christmas spirit! In fact Catra, I got you and Adora each a pair. Now we can all match!”

Adora clasped her hands together excitedly, wasting no time in putting the hat on her head while Catra shook her head as Glimmer tried to hand her hers. “There’s no way I’m wearing that.”

“Aww c’mon, where’s your sense of Christmas spirit?” Glimmer pouted while Bow cracked a grin at the scene in front of him.

“Catra seems more like the Grinch. I think we’ll call her Grinch Catra from now on.”

A low growl left Catra as she listened to Bow and Glimmer. She wasn’t sure who this Grinch person is, but she knew they were making fun of her. Maybe she should have killed them back when they were on opposite sides in the war after all.

Soon, princesses from all over the region started pouring in. An irritated groan flew from Catra’s lips when she saw Hordak and Entrapta enter, bringing their little pet robot Emily with them. Great, something else to get on her nerves.

“Merry Christmas everyone!” Entrapta greeted as she dragged a very reluctant Hordak behind her. Catra’s lips slowly curved into a slight smirk at the sight. Finally, there was someone here who shared her disdain for this party. She didn’t feel so alone anymore.

Catra kept mostly to herself as she watched everyone mingle and chat amongst themselves, her eyes focused on Adora as she watched her girlfriend laugh and carry on with her friends. A ghost of a smile appeared on Catra’s face, despite her annoyance at having to endure this social gathering. It was worth it to see Adora truly at peace. It seemed Adora never got time to be herself these days with all the work she was doing as She-Ra.

“Enjoying the party, are we?”

A guff voice caused Catra to snap out of her trance as she turned to face Hordak holding a glass of champagne. She scoffed lowly under her breath. “What’s it to you?”

A chuckle left Hordak as he leaned against the wall, sipping on the alcohol slowly as he watched Catra get all defensive. “You’re not the only one who doesn’t want to be here, but Entrapta insisted a party would be a great way for me to…mingle with these people. As if anyone here actually wants to be around me. I can hardly blame them.”

Catra let out a sigh. “Join the club. They don’t care about us, so why should we care about them? All I wanted to do today was spend it with Adora, not share her with everyone in Etheria.”

“Perhaps you still can get what you want. No one would notice if you two slipped away for five minutes.”

A look of surprise crossed Catra’s face. She wasn’t expecting to hear that from Hordak. “Wait, are…you helping me? Wow, I think this is what they call a Christmas miracle.”

“Don’t get the wrong idea. I’m doing this so I can potentially tear Entrapta away from this wretched party. I’m not doing this just to help you.” Hordak snapped, causing a small smirk to cross Catra’s face.

“Now who’s getting defensive?”

“Just go already before I regret helping you.” Hordak snapped, looking away from Catra.

But Catra could tell he really wanted to help her, and that small gesture made him somewhat likable again.

“Everyone gather around, it’s almost time to open presents!” Adora announced to everyone as all the guests quickly gathered together. This gave Catra an idea as she grinned to herself, before casually approaching Adora and whispering lowly in her ear. “If you want my present meet me upstairs.”

Before Adora had a chance to ask her what she meant by that, Catra was already gone.

“Catra?” Adora called out as she ventured upstairs, not seeing a trace of her girlfriend anywhere. The creaking of a closet door got her attention as she walked towards it, opening it slowly and peered inside.

Suddenly a pair of hands grabbed her by the waist and pulled her the rest of the way in, eliciting a yelp from the blonde woman as she came face to face with Catra's smug expression. "Catra, what are we doing in here?"

Her question was soon answered by Catra's lips capturing hers. The sudden kiss sent shivers down her spine as Adora returned it with equal passion, a soft moan escaping her lips as she found herself getting lost in the moment.

But she quickly snapped back to reality remembering the party taking place downstairs. Breaking away from Catra, Adora couldn't help but shoot her an annoyed look. "Catra, we can't sneak away like this. There are people waiting for us downstairs. I don't have time for this."

A brief flash of hurt shone in Catra's eyes before it was quickly masked by anger. "So you'd rather spend your Christmas hanging with a bunch of random people than with me? Fine, go be with your 'friends'. See if I care."

Adora let out a sigh. She could tell Catra was hurt and was using her anger to cover it up. She has always been like that, but recently she had been trying to get her emotions under control.

Adora reached out to place a hand on Catra's shoulder but Catra angrily shrugged it off, continuing to glare at the wall, not glancing over at Adora once. "I'm sorry I hurt your feelings, Catra. I didn't mean to. It's just…I wanted our first Christmas to be special. I wanted to spend it with all of our friends we made in Etheria. I thought a big Christmas party is what we needed to make this day special."

"But you decided that, Adora. Not me. I never wanted to have this party. All I wanted to do was spend the day with you and that would have been enough for me. You're the only one I care about."

Adora could feel her heart melt hearing Catra's words. She had to admit she did get a bit caught up in planning this party and throwing it without really asking how Catra felt about it. She just assumed it would be okay since Catra never really protested against it. "Catra, if you felt this strongly about not having a party, why didn't you say anything sooner?"

"Because I saw how happy you were and I didn't want to do anything to ruin it." Catra admitted, her words coming out in a soft whisper.

Adora smiled, reaching forward to gently cup Catra's face. "That is so sweet. I appreciate what you were trying to do, but maybe in the future we could be a little more honest with each other so things like this don't happen again."

"And start planning things together rather than doing it all on our own." Catra added, using a finger to gently brush away a strand of hair on Adora's face.

“I can agree to that.” Adora grinned, happy that she and Catra were able to work this out fairly quickly. It only proved how much Catra has grown over the years and is quickly becoming the best version of herself. Adora couldn’t be prouder.

“Well, I guess we should go back out there.” Catra’s voice broke Adora out of her thoughts as she headed for the door, only for Adora to step in front of her.

“Not yet. There is something else I had planned for later but since we’re already alone, it couldn’t hurt to do it now.” A coy smile spread across Adora’s face as she pulled out a small plant from her pocket. Catra gave her a confused look.

“What the hell is that?”

Adora couldn’t help but smirk. “Mistletoe. When two people are standing under it they have to kiss. I’m told it’s a Christmas tradition.”

“This might be the first Christmas tradition I actually like.” Catra purred as she pulled Adora close, kissing her fervently. Maybe this Christmas wouldn’t be so bad after all.
