Catra and Adora

by bluest_bells

Summary

As beautiful as this time of year was, Catra knew Adora was, at heart, a winter person. Cold, frigid air, stocked up boots and covered up clothes, hot drinks and warm fireplaces with loved ones. That was what Adora loved and looked forward to, year after year. Refusing to let go of her favorite season, she stuck with its traditions all through spring and summer despite her lover's multiple attempts at persuading her otherwise. It just wasn't in her nature to give up, heatstroke be damned, she always said.

This year, Catra had crafted a master plan to cheer her partner up. Well, that was the goal though it could definitely go very bad very fast, all depending on Adora's reaction.

Or, the one where they get married at the end

Heterochromia eyes stared at a figure across her, shoulders leaning against the doorway for support. Adora was sitting on the ledge of her apartment window (yes, window, singular) sipping hot cocoa from her sunshine mug. It was the last day of spring and the heat was really starting to set in, the last traces of snow leaving fields over fields of flowers in its absence.

As beautiful as this time of year was, Catra knew Adora was, at heart, a winter person. Cold, frigid air, stocked up boots and covered up clothes, hot drinks and warm fireplaces with loved ones. That was what Adora loved and looked forward to, year after year. Refusing to let go of her favorite season, she stuck with its traditions all through spring and summer despite her lover's multiple attempts at persuading her otherwise. It just wasn't in her nature to give up, heatstroke be damned, she always said.

Yes, she was petty and stubborn but it was for good reason. Adora, a softie under all that muscle, missed the time spent with her friends. They loved spending time with her, of course, but they had places to be, people to live aside. Though a constant presence, they were all scattered across the globe like stars spread across a galaxy, a single glance the sum of their in-person interactions. Catra, the only one she forever could hold dear, understood this and knew to reassure her from time to time.

This year especially, Catra had crafted a master plan to cheer her partner up. Well, that was the goal though it could definitely go very bad very fast, all depending on Adora's reaction.

Catra gulped down her coffee, trying not to think of the possibility. She placed her matching mug on the hard wood of the dark oak table next to her, walking towards the blonde who was lost in the constant beeping of traffic downstairs. Said person bristled when calloused hands weaved themselves through silk strands of blonde hair, looking up into familiar eyes that melted like salted butter in the sun when facing her.

"M- orning," she yawned, leaning into the palm that had since slid to her cheek, "Why're you awake, it's like, what- only 5? You hate mornings, Cat."

Oh, and didn't she know it. Her eyelids were caked to her cheeks, her shirt sticking to her skin with the sweat that had accumulated from their slumber. All of it was making her feel like an unflattering burrito, which was really not the best feeling. All of that mattered but then again it didn't. Not when Adora was in the question.

"Ha ha," she deadpanned, the soft smile on her face betraying her tone, "Think I can sleep without you, dummy? I'm already awake anyway, tell me what's wrong."

"How'd you know something's wrong? Everything's fine!" Adora said in a taunting tone, simply for the sake of pretenses. She slouched anyway, leaving against Catra's shoulder with a sigh, not even trying anymore.

"Mmhm, and I'm a fucking princess," Catra rolled her eyes, softly settling beside her girlfriend with her knees tucked under her thighs, "We're not going anywhere until you fess up, not even to the skating rink."

"Stubborn brat," she swore she heard Adora mumble under her breath. She retaliated by shoving her elbow into the other's ribs- too gentle to be anything more than playful.

They soon settled into a still but comfortable silence only broken by the rustling of clothes and limbs everytime they shifted to adjust better to the small space, not meant to be taken up by a grownass person, forget two. Catra, comforted by her lover's presence, was starting to lull to a familiar dreamscape when interrupted by Adora's hesitant voice.

"I- I don't wanna get married," she croaked, tears spilling out her eyes already as she hid her face in the brunette's shoulder.

As Catra brought her lanky arms up to embrace her partner, her mind raced with unsettling thoughts, shocked by Adora's tears. She tried patting the other's shoulder in comfort (terrible at comforting people, as most can probably tell), feeling something in her break when Adora's strong frame shook with sobs. The only time she had seen Adora cry like this had been during the worst days of their lives, a time she would rather forever forget, even if it was how they had finally gotten together.

Catra would admit that she hated a lot of things but she would gladly brave them all if it meant that she never had to see Adora cry in such a heartbreaking way ever again.

"Her," she called, bringing out the affectionate tone she only used unsarcastically in moments like these, "what do you mean? Please don't stress, we can cancel the venue and refund the catering-"

"No!" Adora yelped, looking up with bloodshot eyes and a nose flushed a bright red from her crying, "I-that- I didn't mean that! I still want to get married, it's just…"

She looked down again, trailing off as the morning sun caught on the waves of blond hair cascading down her shoulders. Running a hand through her short brown hair, Catra sighed when the realization hit her.

Winter wasn't only meeting her friends and making snowmen. Winter was remembering the parent-shaped hole in her heart, 25 years all alone.

" 'Dora-" she started only to be cut off by a very frantic Princess of Power grabbing the wrist she had been running through her hair and bringing it to her breast, over her heart.

"I know it's stupid! I do, I just- I really want to look back on this and have no regrets, you know? And I love you so much, I do! I just- I really want to have them there but I know, I know…" she had said, her voice echoing through the room at its start and ending as no more than a gentle whisper of the wind.

"Dora," she said, firmer this time though the softness stayed, "It's okay to feel that way, you know? I know you love me and I hope you know I love you. I know I'm enough for you, but it's okay to want more. It doesn't mean you think of me any less, yeah?"

She let out a soft chuckle at the eager nod Adora gave her in response, lifting her hand to brush the tears off the tops of her round cheeks.

"I wish they could be here too," she whispered, knocking their foreheads together softly, "But, for the time being, I hope you'll take these idiots as good enough to walk you down the aisle."

As if on cue, a shiny duo burst through the door (and by burst, it literally meant burst through the door), landing face first onto the wood planks that made up their floor. Getting up with a groan, they were accidentally groped by purple hair as a geared up girl used their bodies as means to move towards the couple by the ledge. The small apartment filled up quickly, Frosta on Perfuma's shoulders so as to not get lost in the crowd. A hoot broke the still air and the rest of the crew burst into cheers.

"Surprise!" Entrapta chirped, slipping up her goggles and smiling before she was shoved to the side by an excited Perfuma and Frosta, each bearing an armful of gifts which they promptly dropped at the obvious tear tracks on Adora's face.

"What's wrong?" a concerned Scorpia questioned, walking up at the noise of dropped presents. She stumbled back into Mermista, who held her upright and simply brought her back, knowing to give the two some space, Sea Hawk quieting down and helping her.

Kyle, Lonnie and Rogelio help Glimmer and Bow up and walk past the crowded group together to reach their best friends.

"What are you guys- Cat?" Adora questioned, looking at the people that now occupied the small space of their apartment that could really only comfortably hold 5 people max. She turned to Catra last, directing the question at her as she suspected this was all her doing.

"Well-" Catra started, reaching out to Adora when she was interrupted by an overexcited Scorpia.

"Catra invited us for the wedding!" she blurted, smacking a claw over her mouth with a dramatic slap at the end of it, shrinking slightly at the glare Catra threw her way.

"Isn't the wedding in fall, though? We haven't even got everything done-" Adora pushed, her eyebrows creasing then clearing when Catra gently nudged a finger to smoothen the crease.

"Well-"

"She knows how much you hate summer-" Glimmer interrupted, too impatient to wait for Catra.

"- and was hoping to change your perception of it-" Bow added helpfully, Glimmer's habits rubbing off on him.

"- with an early wedding! Isn't that so romantic?" Perfuma gushed, pink tulips (her trademark flower) sprouting all around her and accidentally wrapping around Sea Hawks's ankle, "Oh gosh, I'm so sorry-"

"More like stressful . All the planning she had to finalize," Mermista corrected, shivering at the thought of willingly putting so much work on your shoulders. A light blush formed when a face came into mind, her consciousness going into remaining her resting bitch face as she continued to tune out Sea Hawk's squeaks for help accompanied by Perfuma's rapid apologies.

Adora ignored it all, though, in favor of turning to Catra.

"You-" she started, her voice already breaking, tears creeping up her bloodshot eyes as Catra went into panic mode, trying to comfort her fiancé.

"Please don't cry, I'm sorry! We don't have to do it!" Catra fretted, her voice cracking in concern as she remained completely oblivious to the smile Adora hid behind her hand, more focused on the tears traveling over the ridge.

"Gosh, I'm not sad! I'm just- you did all that for me?" she asked, biting her lip to suppress the all encompassing smile that threatened to take over her face. Catra's face softened at her question, leaning in to kiss her cheek, her smile all the answer Adora needed apparently as she sniffled against the newfound tears.

"Not to break up the moment, but don't you have to get ready?" Entrapta chirped, smiling a smile that showed all her teeth, expressing her excitement without words.

"She's right, don't you have gowns to jump into or something?" :onnie asked, her eyebrow ticked up as her voice prompted Rogelio to nod in agreement. Kyle suddenly jumped in his spot, seemingly panicked.

"My suit! It's not IRONED!" he yelped in explanation, blushing when he noticed all the eyes that had turned to him in concern. He ducked his head down, mumbling under his breath as Lonnie softly smacked the top of his head.

"Oh no…" Adora whispered, "oh NO! Is it today? Is the wedding TODAY?? I- I'M NOT READY?!"

Her voice rose in pitch, her strong arms practically shaking the life out of poor Bow who just happened to be in front of her. Catra swooped in and put a stop to the shaking, much to Bow's gratitude, taking Adora's hands into hers instead.

"Hey, it's not till later, don't worry. We have plenty of time to get everything ready, make changes and then, have the time of our lives, okay, dummy?" Catra spoke, lacing their fingers together and leaving a kiss on top. She wasn't usually this affectionate, not in front of people, but Adora wasn't usually this emotional either so she figured it all measured out in the end.

Adora smiled, a real one that made Catra's heart feel like a teenager in love all over again, and pulled Catra to her in a bone-crushing hug.

"Okay. Just don't trip all over yourself when you see me in my dress and we'll call it a deal," she teased, rubbing her swollen eyes.

Catra laughed good naturedly, happy to see her fiancé back to her cheerful self. What would've otherwise gotten a tease back just got a "You wish," and a hard nudge to her side, their smiles too big for their faces.

"Alright, love birds," Frosta yelled, effectively breaking the moment, "Let's see who can get dressed and to the venue first!"

The look in her eyes spelled trouble, trouble they could not spark with this group of idiots. Before Adora could move to stop them, though, they had already evacuated the apartment in a rush, their competitiveness still not mellowed out with the years.

Catra sighed, turning back to Adora who was eyeing her with such fondness, she had to turn away.

“What?” she asked defensively, blushing prominently against the sunlight that shone out the window, her brown hair askew from the stressful/eventful morning, all but glowing under the sun’s rays.

“Nothing,” Adora smiled, curling a hand around the brunette’s hair, tucking it carefully behind her ears as her eyes explored every crevice of her face like she was seeing it for the very first time.

She had a habit of doing things like that a lot, had been doing it every other day for the past 4 years. Catra, like with everything else Adora did, had not formed any sort of immunity against it, even with all those years behind her, melting into her hand.

“Come on, let’s go deal with them before they blow up the venue with flowers and drench everything in water then try to save it by freezing it all,” Adora joked, face lighting up at Catra’s laughter. She stood up, pushing off the window ledge, and offered a hand out to Catra, wiggling her eyebrows suggestively.

Catra rolled her eyes at her antics, simply grabbing the offered hand and setting off at a quick pace, her tugging Adora along, this time.

“Slow down, I ’m gonna trip- ”

And trip she did, here, in the hallway of their apartment building, the walls close together enough for her to grab onto before she planted face-first into the wooden planks. Later, when walking down the aisle, stepping on her dress with her sneakers, the laces not helping her misery as she falls, only to be picked up by Catra.

Funny, how she used to be the one picking up Catra and now she’s the one being picked.

Four years ago, she would’ve never believed anyone if they told her this day would come. As hopeless in love as she was with her childhood friend, she had been certain Catra had hated her.

It wasn’t four years ago, though, and they weren’t the same people. Sure, they were always Catra and Adora, but now , they were Catra and Adora . Together, for better or for worse, for richer or for poorer, in sickness or in health.

When they sealed the cemoroney with a kiss under a frozen line of fairy light, tulips blooming below them, they were Catra and Adora .

On the very best day of the rest of their lives.
