Comfort In The Garden

by xAsleepxForeverx

Summary

Lately, Castaspella has taken a liking to nightly walks in Mystacor's gardens.

But She's also been getting not so kindly reminded of her brother Micah's death by a few of Mystacor's sorcerers who seem to not like her.

Notes

I actually wrote this for an assignment in my English class for school and thought I might as well publish it here too

This is a kind of short one-shot. So, bear with me.

Tonight, Castaspella was again taking another walk through Mystacor's gardens under the moonlight, and this time had convinced Shadow Weaver to take the walk with her. The reason Castaspella had lately been taking a liking to these nightly walks is because, for her, it had been calming, a way for her to de-stress after a tiring day of duties. But lately, Castaspella had been feeling upset. And the reason? Because a few of Mystacor's sorcerers had been purposely reminding her, in an unkind way, of her older brother Micah, who had died some years ago in a battle related incident. Castaspella had hoped the night walk through the garden would calm her like it usually did.

Shadow Weaver, however, could tell Castaspella was feeling upset, and it did concern her. Since the day they started dating, Shadow Weaver had this seemingly hidden ability to pick up on whenever Castaspella was upset and would know how to comfort her. "What's Wrong?" Shadow Weaver had asked, concern evident in her tone of voice and etched into her expression, "You have that look on your face. I can tell something is bothering you."

At the question, Castaspella couldn't help the sad sigh that escaped her Mouth. Tears pricked the corner of her eyes as she spoke, "A few of the sorcerers have lately been deciding to cruelly remind me of Micah's death." Castaspella admitted now, her voice cracking slightly, "And it hurts a lot, being reminded of him that way." Castaspella wiped away her tears, but more tears filled her eyes and slowly ran down her face. It was clear how much she missed her brother, and how much it was hurting her being reminded of his death in such a way.

Shadow Weaver took her mask off that covered her entire face and put a comforting hand on Castaspella's shoulder. "Well, no matter what way those sorcerers have been reminding you of your brother, I'll personally handle it later." Shadow Weaver stated, but not without giving Castaspella a reassuring look.

But as they continued their walk through Mystacor's gardens, tension slowly started to rise. Castaspella was silent, still feeling upset. And, Shadow Weaver was tense, now knowing that Castaspella was dealing with something like that alone, that people were rudely upsetting her. But as they continued to walk in silence, Castaspella stopped in place for a moment, getting a bad feeling. And as she stopped, the same three sorcerers made their way over, having spotted Castaspella. And when Castaspella saw them, a feeling of dread washed over her. Shadow Weaver saw this too and quickly guessed what was about to happen. It wasn't going to be good.

"Hello, Head Sorceress." The first sorcerer spoke with a cruel-looking smirk, "Taking a walk through the gardens again?"

Castaspella couldn't find what to say. All she could do was stand there, knowing what was coming next. And, just as she expected, the sorcerers started again with their act of tormenting Castaspella, reminding her of Micah, commenting on how her skills in sorcery still needed a bit of work, and so on. And as it went on, Castaspella's breathing quickened. As the Head Sorceress, she should be able to handle this fine, right? But she couldn't. And as for Shadow Weaver, however, she didn't like seeing Castaspella in distress. And so, she stepped forward and stood in front of Castaspella, with a scowl on her face.

"Enough!" Shadow Weaver hissed, causing the sorcerers to momentarily stop their tormenting. Shadow Weaver's tone was threatening, but apparently it wasn't yet enough.

Two of the three sorcerers thought it would be a good idea to test Shadow Weaver. But it didn't go the way they wanted to. Because the second they tried, Shadow Weaver summoned a spell, ready to use it if they didn't stop now.

"I said that was enough." Shadow Weaver spoke again, her tone more threatening now, the sigil for the spell glowing dangerously in the air in front of her.

Finally, the sorcerers got the hint that Shadow Weaver wasn't one to be messed with. So, they quickly backed up and finally left, leaving Castaspella alone once again. Shadow Weaver made the sigil disappear before quickly turning around to face Castaspella.

"You alright now, Casta?" Shadow Weaver asked now, concern evident in her expression again.

"I... I'm Fine, Shadow Weaver…" Castaspella spoke in a quieter tone. But it was clear she wasn't okay. Tears were streaming down her face now. She was moments away from crying.

Seeing that, Shadow Weaver huffed before pulling Castaspella into a hug. Usually, she wasn't one for hugs. But for Castaspella, she made an exception. After a few minutes, Castaspella luckily was able to calm down.

“Thanks…” Castaspella sighed now, a smile forming on her face now.

“You’re welcome, Casta.” Shadow Weaver smiled too now, “Feel like continuing our walk through the gardens now?”

“I’d love that.” Castaspella spoke in a more relieved tone now that those sorcerers left her alone again for now.

Castaspella shared a kiss with Shadow Weaver as another thanks. Finally, she and Shadow Weaver started the walk through the gardens again, but this time held hands. Shadow Weaver had protected Castaspella again, and Castaspella was thankful for it.
