A Dark and Stormy Night

by CelestialStorm

Summary

A raging thunderstorm keeps Catra up at night, and Adora is the only one who can comfort her. While she's trying to comfort Catra, she remembers the first time this happened, back when they were kids in the horde. A fluffy Catradora fic, with a small bit of angst thrown in.

Notes

Written after a thunderstorm kept me awake last night. XD You could say inspiration struck me to write this lol. Anyways, I hope y'all enjoy!

Catra covered her ears as a clap of thunder roared above her, followed by the heavy splatter of rain as it hit the ground. Catra always detested storms ever since she was little. They were loud and hurt her sensitive ears, but most of all, it was scary to her.

"I'm never going to be able to get to sleep at this rate." Catra growled, turning over roughly in bed as she desperately tried to get into a comfortable position. She glanced over at Adora who was sound asleep next to her, the loud noises outside not even making her stir. Catra fought back a scoff. Adora could sleep through literally anything. She both loved and hated that about her. She wished she could sleep through all of this.

Another boom of thunder caused Catra to jump, hastily throwing the covers over her head and instinctively curling up against Adora in the process. Her whole body was shaking like a leaf as she desperately tried to calm herself down. The last thing she wanted was for Adora to wake up and see her like this, clinging to her like some frightened child.

Unfortunately for Catra, that last clap of thunder did stir Adora from her sleep as she opened her eyes a bit, letting out a yawn as she adjusted to the darkness of the room. The first thing she noticed was the messy bed covers and Catra curled against her, but she quickly pulled away once she realized Adora had awoken. "About time you woke up, princess." Catra spat out a bit bitingly as she turned back over onto her side, facing away from the blonde woman who was extremely confused.

"Did I miss something?" Adora asked, still a bit groggy from sleep.

Catra rolled her eyes. “Nah, just the raging storm outside that’s been going on for the past hour. Honestly Adora, we could be under attack and you would just sleep right through it.”

“I’m sorry. I guess I’m a heavy sleeper.” A low chuckle left Adora’s lips but was soon cut short when she saw the state Catra was in. She was completely under the covers and Adora could tell right away she was scared. That had always been her to go to response ever since they were kids. She always hid under the covers whenever something would scare her. A soft smile now lingered on Adora’s gentle features. “Catra, it’s okay to be scared. I’m not going to judge you. Just let me help you through this.”

Adora reached out to gently put her arms around Catra but she found herself quickly shrugged off. Catra looked over her shoulder and glared harshly. Whenever she would get like this, she didn’t want people feeling sorry for her. Deep down, she knew Adora meant well, and showing vulnerability around her and others was still a learning experience for her, but her shields were up and right now, she didn’t want Adora’s comfort. “I used to be a horde solder! A little rain and noise shouldn’t faze me one bit. If it does, then it’s only showing how weak and pathetic I am.”

“That’s not true.” Adora frowned, hating that she couldn’t comfort her girlfriend who was clearly scared and needed somebody right now. She sighed as she thought back to the first time she saw Catra so scared of storms, back when they were small children training to be horde solders.

Flashback

The soft giggles of two young children could be heard as they ran around their bedroom, playing a game of tag. It was starting to get late, but that didn't stop the girls from having some fun. "I'm gonna get you, Adora!" The young voice of Catra filled the room as Adora let out another giggle, which was followed by a grin as she climbed to the top of their bunk bed, sticking her tongue out at the other girl.

"Nuh-uh! I'm way faster than you are." Adora laughed as she watched Catra quickly climbing the ladder to get to her, waiting until Catra neared the top before Adora jumped off and landed on the floor, giggling loudly when she saw how frustrated Catra was becoming.

"You did that on purpose!"

"Did not."

"Did too!"

A loud boom in the air interrupted the girls as Catra looked around wildly, her eyes going wide as the noise echoed in her ears. She didn't like it one bit. "What's going on? Are we under attack?"

Adora shook her head as she yawned. "No silly, that's just thunder. It seems like a storm is coming."

"R-r-right, I knew that." Catra stammered as she looked towards the window. The sky above was pitch black, only being illuminated briefly by the thunder and lightning dancing in the dark sky. It made the Fright Zone look much scarier than it normally is.

"We should probably go to bed before Shadow Weaver checks up on us. You know how she doesn't like us staying up late." Another yawn left Adora's small body as she climbed into the bottom bunk. Usually she slept on the top one but since Catra was already up there, she figured it would be easier if she slept down here for a change.

The loud crackling of thunder made little Catra whimper as she dived under the covers to hide from the storm. She covered her ears as lighting struck, the booming sound causing her ears to ring due to how sensitive they were to noise, especially loud noises. "A-Adora? How long will this last?"

"Hopefully not long." Adora replied, her brow furrowed as she could detect the fear in Catra's voice. "Catra, are you…afraid of the storm?"

"No! Don't be silly. I'm not afraid of anything!" Catra snapped as she tried to control her shaking body. She barely noticed Adora climbing up the ladder and laying down next to her, a soft smile on her round face.

"It's okay to be scared, Catra. You don't have to be brave all the time. No matter what happens, I'll always be here for you."

"You promise?" Catra whispered, blinking back tears as she looked at her friend who, without missing a beat, nodded immediately with a smile on her face.

"I promise." Carefully, Adora embraced her young friend, allowing the small girl to curl up against her chest while she gently rubbed Catra's back, hoping the motion would be enough to soothe the scared child. "I won't let the storm hurt you."

Catra managed a weak smile, grateful to have her friend with her. She didn't know what she would do if Adora wasn't here. Somehow Adora always knew how to make her feel better.

Time passed and Adora eventually fell asleep while Catra remained awake, her small claws clinging to Adora's shirt and jumping whenever a clap of thunder resonated throughout the sky. The sudden opening of a door immediately made Catra sit up in bed, a low hiss leaving her mouth at whoever was standing there, but she quickly stopped when she saw it was Shadow Weaver.

"What are you still doing awake?" The disappointing tone dripped from Shadow Weaver's words as she narrowed her eyes at the sight of Catra in bed with Adora. "And why are you in bed with Adora?"

"I…umm…" Catra nervously stammered and looked away, not really wanting to explain to Shadow Weaver that she was afraid of the storm currently raging outside.

"Answer me!" The booming voice made Catra jump as she let out a soft whine, tears brimming in her eyes. She forced herself to look in Shadow Weaver's direction.

"I'm scared of the storm, okay? And Adora was keeping me company."

Rolling her eyes, Shadow Weaver let a low scoff past through her lips, not caring in the slightest about the scared child in front of her. "You're scared of a little storm? You never fail to disappoint me, Catra. You're a future solder of the horde. If a little rain and noise can scare you this much, then it only shows how weak and pathetic you are. If it wasn't for Adora, I would have thrown you out a long time ago. You have no business being here!"

Tears fell rapidly down Catra's face once the bedroom door slammed shut and Shadow Weaver was no longer present. She wasn't surprised by Shadow Weaver's reaction but that didn't make it hurt any less. Crying softly to herself, she buried her face against Adora's chest while she slept, tears staining her shirt as she fought hard to keep her crying to a minimum. Last thing she wanted was for Adora to wake up and see her in this state. She didn't want to appear weak to anybody, not ever. And from this day forward, Catra would always put on a brave face for others, never letting them see her weak and vulnerable side ever again. It wouldn't be until many years later, during a thunderstorm similar to this one, that Catra would allow Adora to comfort her once again.

End flashback

"Catra, please." Adora begged. She absolutely hated not being able to provide her girlfriend the peace she needed. "You have nothing to feel ashamed of. Everyone gets scared sometimes, and it really helps to have someone there to get you through it. I'm not letting you go through this alone Catra."

Slowly, Catra turned to face Adora, the smallest of smiles dancing on her lips. No matter how hard she tried, Adora always brought out the side Catra thought she long since buried ages ago. Right now, she felt exactly how she did back in the horde that night, looking to Adora to keep her calm and safe. "You promise?"

"I promise."

And then, to silence any other insecurities swimming around in Catra's head, Adora firmly pressed her lips against hers.
