Four Years Later... A Wish Came True

by TheStarGayzingEtherianCollection (TheStarGayzingEtherian)

Summary

Four years after the end of the war, Adora finds an old wish of hers coming true. (Catradora, Canon, Fluff)

Notes

See the end of the work for notes

Four years, Four long years since she'd saved the world. For Adora, that had felt like an eternity. Because she couldn't imagine life not being as it was now, with Catra and her in love. And tonight... she knew things were going to be different, especially regarding their relationship.

Tonight, Scorpia was holding her first ball in Brightmoon in celebration of the arachnid's birthday. While everyone else had been busy preparing for the occasion, Adora had secretly been making plans of her own. Plans she'd hoped she'd been able to keep secret from everyone else. But then again, Adora was a terrible liar.

Right now, she was in her room, waiting patiently. She was wearing a long, flowing white dress with gold highlights and a cape, a tiara resting on her forehead. It looked a lot like her She-Ra form, though Adora knew she would never have been able to go to a party like that. For starters, she'd probably never get a dress made in that size. Then again, that hadn't stopped Scorpia from looking gorgeous at every event like this.

As Adora looked at herself in the reflection of the waterfall in her room, her long hair flowing behind her, she couldn't help but admit how much she had changed in such a short time. How older she looked now, how much prettier she was, how this was how she'd felt like she was always meant to be.

Much had changed on Etheria as well since the war had ended and the universe had been brought to peace. Queen Angella had been rescued, Mara had been revived, Scorpia had taken her birthright and rebuilt her kingdom over the ruins of the Fright Zone, and Adora had even found out where her true family was, meeting the parents and brother she never knew she had.

But of course, some things hadn't changed a bit, as when Adora tucked a loose lock of blonde hair behind her ear, the door to her room burst open, as Catra rushed inside, Glimmer chasing after her with a hairbrush in hand. Before Adora could react… she suddenly had a strange feeling of Deja Vu.

"Let me brush it!" Glimmer insisted as Catra rushed around Adora, hoping her girlfriend would protect her from the sparkly queen's attack.

"No, stop!" Catra pleaded, laughing. "Adora, stop her she's gonna torture me!"

A small smile couldn't help but form on Adora's face.

Glimmer rolled her eyes. "Do you always have to be so dramatic, Horde Scum?"

"Look, it took me four years to grow my hair back, the last thing I need is you, Sparkles, tearing it out with that brush of doom of yours!" Catra hid behind Adora, the blonde giggling a little.

She wasn't going to lie… she loved how Catra looked these days. Her hair had grown out again, but instead of the wild mane it had been before, it was now a stylish ponytail not that different from Adora's old one. And her attire… well, tonight she certainly looked like a dashing prince, with her red shirt, black and gold pants and white cape.

Before Glimmer could try and pry Catra from Adora, Bow then walked into the room, similarly laughing at what was going on. "Come on guys, do we really need to have this argument again ? If we're late to Scorpia's ball, she's gonna kill us."

Glimmer went to her boyfriend, leaning on his shoulder. Adora had to smile. Glimmer and Bow honestly made the perfect couple, Bow being the best royal consort Glimmer could ask for. As she sighed as Bow held her, the Pinkette then smirked at her felid friend, giving up… for now.

"Fine, Catra, you're off the hook… this time."

Catra just playfully stuck out her tongue. As Glimmer and Bow left the room, Catra began to follow them… and then the felid's tail brushed against Adora's hand. The blonde blushed as Catra turned around, holding her hand out to her, a fond, loving smile on her face. "You coming?"

Adora was about to take it... and then, the feelings of Deja Vu came back again. Had this... happened before? She suddenly remembered... at the heart, she'd had a vision almost identical to this. And then Horde Prime had ruined the moment. Was this real? Was this another dream?

There was only one way to know. She reached out and then took Catra's hand into her own, feeling the soft fur on her hand press against her skin. It was real, all of this was real now. The future she'd seen years ago had now come to pass and it couldn't have been more perfect.

"Wow, squeezing my hand a bit tight there Princess," Catra admitted, as Adora kept firmly holding her hand.

"Uh, sorry," Adora excused, blushing a little in embarrassment. "Just... still surprised that we're really here."

"After four years, you're still surprised we're together?"

"Um... yeah?" Adora admitted.

Catra giggled. "You big dork. Haven't I already said I love you enough times?"

"Well... I wouldn't mind a few more."

She and Catra leaned closer, almost kissing... but then they stopped.

"Save it for the party," Catra reminded her. "You and I both know we don't wanna see Scorpia sad."

"Right, right, I'll be right there," Adora said. "I just... gotta get something."

"Look, don't take too long," Catra insisted. "Otherwise, Sparkles will torture us both."

"Oh... I'm sure she'll understand," Adora replied, smiling knowingly, Catra blissfully unaware of the blonde's little scheme.

"Well, okay, I'll see ya downstairs," her girlfriend stated, before leaving her in peace.

After Catra had left, Adora waited until she couldn't hear the felid's footsteps, knowing she was finally in the clear. Then she walked over to a cabinet and pulled out the little blue velvet box she had been hiding for almost two weeks now. She took the box into her hands and opened it up… seeing the beautiful golden ring inside.

She hadn't exactly been planning this for very long. On her last visit to Eternia, her brother, Adam, had found the ring in their late father, King Randor's, belongings, it being the very same ring he'd proposed to their mother, Marlena with. Adora had been saddened when she'd learned of her father's sudden passing six months ago. He had been a good and kind man from the time she'd spent with him.

Tracing her finger over the ring, Adora gulped. She could do this. If she could face down Horde Prime, Skeletor, Shadow Weaver and all the evils of the universe as She-Ra… asking Catra to marry her would be a walk in the park compared to that. Closing the box, Adora quickly tucked it under her skirt.

As she headed out of her room, she smiled proudly. At some point later that evening, when the moment was right… she was going to ask Catra to be her wife.

When Adora made it downstairs, she could see that the ball was in full swing. People were laughing and dancing. The music was soft and eloquent as servants walked through the crowd carrying trays of flutes of champagne. She could practically feel just how happy everyone was.

She made her way down the steps to the main floor of the ballroom, wondering where her friends were. However, before she could start to search for her friends, a voice called out to her from the crowd.

"There's my favourite sister!"

Adora turned, seeing Adam walking towards her, wearing a very dashing burgundy suit with gold trim. He grinned at her and pulled her into a hug.

"Adam!" Adora exclaimed in surprise. "I didn't know you were coming."

"Well, a certain bird told me you were gonna pop the question to your girl so I couldn't exactly miss this."

"I think you mean falcon, babe," another voice added, Teela, Adam's girlfriend, soon joining them. "Hey, Adora."

"Hi Teela, good to see you too," Adora replied. "Surprised you both could make it."

"Well, Adam's not really a prince anymore and if someone tries anything back on Eternia, I can easily cook up a portal to whisk us back home in an instant," Teela replied. "But honestly, I wouldn't miss any of this for the world."

Adora blushed. "Thank you, both of you."

"Well, we'd better not take up too much of your time," Adam replied, grinning. "See ya, sis."

Adora smiled, as Adam and Teela left her be. She made her way through the crowd, still trying to find Catra. But the moment her brother and his girlfriend had parted ways with her, another dear friend caught her attention.

“Adora!”

The blonde turned, seeing Mara and Light Hope walking towards her, the latter holding onto Mara’s arm and resting against her love. It was certainly a surprise to see Light Hope freed from being a mere AI, now downloaded into an almost human-looking android body with dark skin.

But this was the best way she and Mara could be together and Adora knew that just like her and Catra, Mara and Light Hope deserved their happy ending.

“Oh, hi Mara,” Adora replied.

“You look beautiful,” Mara complimented her. “Is that a new dress?”

“Uh yeah,” Adora responded, blushing. “Have you seen Catra?”

“Not yet, my eyes have been glued to this gorgeous beauty all evening,” Mara flirted, grinning at Light Hope.

The android blushed, her cheeks glowing pink. “Mara, please.”

“Oh don’t be shy, Hope, you know I’m right,” Mara teased. “But yeah, I think I might have seen Perfuma and the others over there somewhere,” she replied, pointing to the corner of the ballroom. “Gotta admit, I never was used to big parties, even in my era.”

“Ah, thanks Mara,” Adora replied.

“No problem,” the former She-Ra told her. “Enjoy your evening.”

Adora headed in the direction Mara had gestured to, hoping she would finally be reunited with her love again. But alas, before Adora could get too far, yet another acquaintance interrupted her.

It was Queen Angella, who was smiling down radiantly at Adora. "Hello, Adora."

"Oh, hey Angella," Adora responded.

"You haven't seen Glimmer have you?" the angelic former Queen asked.

"Not since she left with Bow."

"Ah, I suppose she's still at his side," Angella admitted. "They do make quite the pair, don't they."

"Yeah, they're practically perfect for each other," Adora agreed.

"As are you and Catra," Angella said fondly, making Adora blush. "By the way… congratulations."

Adora's eyes widened. How… How had Angella figured it out? "W-What?!"

Angella laughed lightly. "Adora, you know I'm very observant. I can clearly see the little box you have tucked under your skirt. Don't worry, I won't tell. I'd hate to ruin such a lovely surprise."

"T-Thank you," Adora responded, a little relieved. "I… I'm a little nervous, to be honest."

"You should have seen Micah before he proposed to me," Angella giggled. "Nearly dropped the ring." She stroked Adora's cheek. "Don't worry about it, Adora. You will do fine. If anyone deserves to be happy together, it's you and Catra."

Adora sighed, knowing Queen Angella was right as always. If anything, Angella was the first person in her life who had felt like a mother to her. Not that she didn't love her own mother of course. In fact, Marlena and Angella got on very well. But Angella… she had given Adora the chance to start her new life here in Brightmoon. She had always supported her. And Adora couldn't thank her enough.

“Thank you,” Adora said gratefully. “Now, I better go find where Catra is.”

“Have fun!” Angella chirped, before spreading her wings and taking off into the air towards one of the upper balconies in the ballroom where Micah was waiting for her.

After parting ways with Queen Angella, Adora finally made it to where Perfuma was. The plumerian Princess was talking with Mermista, Frosta, Netossa and Spinnerella, while an eager Entrapta was sat on the floor scoffing down a whole plate of tiny snacks she’d gotten for herself.

“Perfuma?” Adora asked, waving over to the group of her friends.

Perfuma turned, beaming. “Oh, Adora! So good to see you!” She hugged her tightly. “You look perfect!”

“And you look as great as ever,” Adora replied, blushing humbly.

“Come, come join us,” Perfuma insisted, guiding Adora over to the group. “We were just talking baby names with Netossa and Spinnerella here.”

“I still say Andromeda is a good name if it’s a girl,” Mermista insisted.

“Nah, if it’s a girl, it should totally be something like… Netosseralla! Put your two names together! I don’t care how awkward it is!” Frosta insisted. Even if she was a bit older now… and taller, she sometimes still acted like a big kid. But then again, no one was really going to blame her. She’d more than earned the chance to act like that considering how her life had been during the war.

Netossa chuckled. “Guys, guys, I appreciate it, but Spinny and I already picked out potential baby names.”

Her pregnant wife nodded, clinging to her arm. “Of course, it did take us a while. You know how insistent 'Tossa gets.”

Netossa blushed. “Yeah, yeah.”

“Still surprised you two are gonna be moms,” Adora admitted. “Makes me feel kinda old.”

“We are definitely going to have a baby shower for you two when the due date gets closer,” Perfuma insisted. “By the way, Adora, are you enjoying the party?”

“Oh well, I think this has been one of the best balls I’ve ever attended!” Perfuma declared.

“Really? Even better than the big shindig we had after the war?” Adora wondered. That truly was a party for the ages. Adora remembered Catra wearing her Princess Prom suit again for that party… and Stars, did it feel good to see her sweeping her off her feet in that under better circumstances.

"Well, it's not every day I get to attend a party celebrating the woman I love," Perfuma admitted.

“Awww, well, I’m really glad you two found each other,” Adora said "Pretty certain she wants that family of little scorpions with you."

Perfuma blushed. “Well, unlike Netossa and Spinnerella, I don’t think I’m quite ready to rush into motherhood just yet.”

“That’s fair,” Adora accepted.

"Well, what about you and Catra? Any talks about the future?"

“Yeah, sure there’s not gonna be a litter of kittens running around this place in a few years?” Mermista teased.

Adora giggled. “Well, maybe not that but… I think I do have one or two plans.” She was trying her best not to give herself away. Aside from Adam and now, Angella, no one knew Adora was planning to propose that night. She hadn't even told Glimmer and Bow.

"Oh?"

"But I'll take care of them… when the time is right," Adora stated. "By the way, where is the Birthday girl?"

"Oh, I think she asked Catra for a dance!" Perfuma chirped.

And sure enough, on the dance floor on the other side of the ballroom, Catra indeed dancing with the birthday girl on the dance floor. Scorpia was practically… glowing with happiness. Catra had never seen her friend buzzing with such joy. Then again, it was her birthday after all.

"Enjoying the party?" The felid asked, grinning up at her best friend.

"Oh, you bet!" Scorpia declared. "I never expected so many to be here."

"Well, everyone here always loves a good party," Catra reminded her. "Still not as fun as that time we were in the Crimson Waste though if you ask me. Not enough people beating the crap out of each other."

Scorpia giggled before she spun Catra out and then back into her giant arms. "So… are you ready for the big question?"

Catra too had plans to propose that evening, but she'd only confided in Scorpia about it. The last thing she needed was Glimmer and Bow teasing about it endlessly, making her even more anxious than she already was. She'd had it all planned out for weeks at this point… but even now, when she knew Adora was there in the room with her, she was still unsure.

"I hope so… but…"

"But what?" Scorpia wondered.

The felid gulped. “But what if she doesn’t say yes?”

Suddenly, Scorpia stopped in her tracks. She looked from side to side for a moment, before dragging Catra to a small alcove in the room, behind a large plant pot. She hoped they wouldn’t be seen but… well, with Scorpia’s size, it was hard for her to hide literally anywhere. But at least for the moment, they’d have some privacy.

Glaring at Catra, she pointed her big claw over in the direction of Adora, whom she’d just seen walk over to Perfuma and the others. “Wildcat, do you see that woman over there? The big tall blonde you are hopelessly in love with?”

“Yes?” Catra wondered, a little confused.

“She means everything to you, yes? You love her with all your heart?”

“Uh yeah,” Catra responded, still confused.

"And you want to make her the happiest woman in the whole universe, yes?"

"Yes."

"So go up there, get down on that one knee and pop that question to her!"

"R-Right now? But, this is still your party!”

"Yes, it's my party, and you know what would be the best present for me?" Scorpia fondly smiled. "Seeing my best friend asking the love of her life to be her wife!”

Catra looked into her friend's eyes and then looked over at Adora. She did love Adora, more than anything in the whole universe. And nothing would make her happier than having Adora as her wife, forever. She gulped, pushing down those last few anxious thoughts, knowing that it was either now or never.

“You can do it,” Scorpia encouraged. “She’s waiting there for you.”

"...okay. Okay! I'm gonna do it!"

“Atta girl!” Scorpia declared. “Go get her, Wildcat!”

Nodding, Catra got up and marched across the dance floor to where Adora was, trying to be confident, trying to not let her worries get in the way of her and Adora’s eternal happiness. When Catra arrived, it was Perfuma who noticed the felid’s arrival, giving both her and Adora a knowing smile.

“Well, it looks like your prince is here,” Perfuma said sweetly.

“Oh?” Adora turned and saw Catra, blushing and gulping. “H-Hi Catra! Great party huh?” She awkwardly blurted out. "Say did you know Netossa and Spinny are having a baby?! Wild huh?!"

Blinking in surprise, Catra then smiled. Stars, she adored this dork. "Yeah I know, we were there when they announced it. Still, congratulations again you two."

"Thanks, Catra," Netossa replied, smiling.

Perfuma grinned. “Well, I suppose we’ll give you some privacy,” she gestured to the other princesses to take their leave of Adora and Catra. Within moments, the two of them were alone, only the sounds of the party ringing in their ears. Catra and Adora both stared at one another, both still a little nervous about making the next move.

Adora took a deep breath through her nose. Catra and her were alone now. This was a perfect chance to pop the question to her. The ring was still tucked under her skirt, ready to be slipped onto Catra's finger. It's okay, Adora, you can do this. You're brave, you're strong, she's there for you. Just get down on one knee and do it.

Gulping again, Catra just stared up and down at her girlfriend. She hadn't noticed until now how drop-dead gorgeous Adora looked in that dress of hers. She was the most beautiful woman in the whole room as far as she was concerned, not that Adora would admit that. She'd easily say others like Glimmer, Scorpia or Teela were much more beautiful than her.

The felid tried to find the next word, but she started shaking a little. Could she do this? She reached into her back pocket, where her ring had been hidden.

"Catra?" Adora wondered, feeling concerned. She took her lover's hands. "Are you okay? You... you look like you're shaking."

"I... I'm okay!" Catra responded, trying to reassure her love. "just..." She finally went for it. "Adora, I love you more than anything, more than anyone else. I want to be with you forever and…"

Catra stopped as she and Adora could see the whole room had fallen silent, everyone's eyes fixed on them. That… definitely was not helping either of their anxieties, but neither of them was going to back out of this now. Catra looked at Adora straight on, knowing what she needed to do.

"Catra…" Adora wondered, blushing softly.

"Just… close your eyes for one second?"

Adora nodded, her eyes slowly shutting. And there in front of everyone, Catra got down on one knee, with a little red box soon being produced from her pocket. She opened it up and soon, the golden ring was revealed to everyone. Adora then opened her eyes… and she gasped, covering her mouth.

"Oh my stars…"

"Okay, I'm going to only say this once," Catra stated, still shaking a little. "Adora, love of my life, hero of Etheria, Princess of Eternia, the bestest friend I could ever have… will you marry me?"

The blonde was sobbing at this point, her hand still covering her mouth. She wasn't even upset that Catra had beaten her to it. She was just so... happy. The tears kept flowing down her cheeks. It was then she decided she might as well return the favour. “Catra… I…” She got down as well, pulling the box out from under her skirt.

When Adora opened it up, revealing the ring to Catra, the felid blushed bright red, covering her mouth.

“Catra, my one true love, the one whose love saved my life, my soulmate,” Adora said proudly, still crying tears of joy. “Will… will you marry me too?”

“W-what?!” Catra exclaimed in shock.

Adora began giggling through her tears. "I was going to propose to you too!”

Catra began to laugh as well. “Oh you stupid idiot dork… yes! Yes, I’ll marry you!”

“And I’ll marry you!” Adora cried out with joy as she and Catra hugged each other tightly. The entire room erupted into applause and cheers for the happy couple, both of whom were so glad that the other had said yes. But realistically, in whatever universe, would either of them have ever said no?

From where she stood with Perfuma, Scorpia clasped her claws together, crying as well. "Oh, isn't it romantic!"

“Oh, I completely agree my love!” Perfuma added.

“Best birthday present ever!” the arachnid cried out.

Glimmer too was crying, tears streaming from her eyes.

Bow hugged his girlfriend around the waist, smiling at them"You okay, honey?"

The queen nodded. "Just... so happy for them."

"Yeah," Bow added. "Me too."

Adora pulled away, still holding Catra, not wanting to let her go. The tears were still pouring, as she heard the sound of everyone clapping around her. If she were honest, this would have probably been the happiest day of her life… if she didn't know for a fact that hers and Catra's wedding was going to be even more perfect than this.

"We... really put on a show there," Catra admitted, chuckling.

Her new fiancee sighed, stroking Catra's hair. "I... I've never felt so happy."

"Me... me too," Catra whispered. "And here I was thinking you weren't gonna say yes."

"You really thought that?" Adora said, faking being ashamed. "Catra, the horror!"

"Hey, I've never proposed to a girl before!" Catra snarked back before she laughed and hugged Adora again. "I love you so much."

"I love you so much more," Adora whispered, before she then grabbed Catra, kissing her deeply in front of everyone. Catra, as always kissed her back. Pretty soon... they'd have a wedding to plan. And it was going to be glorious.

End Notes

HAPPY FOURTH ANNIVERSARY CATRADORA! I hope that I would have more to post today, but well, I've been sick the last couple of days and also quite distracted. Still, I hope you like this lovely little tale. I do love the thing of where two girls propose to each other and neither knew what the other was going to do hehe.
