Spells and Illusions

by xAsleepxForeverx

Summary

In the Training grounds, Micah is teaching his sister a few spells and illusions.

However, Castaspella, being the kid that she is, gets the idea to use the new illusion spells learned to prank her brother.

Notes

Written as a short story for the SPOP Creative Flex April Fool's Jesters event with the "Spells and Illusions" prompt!

-Location: Mystacor; Palace training grounds-

A beautiful day in Mystacor it was.

With the Moons of enchantment aligned above them, Mystacor's invisibility shield was stronger than ever.

In the palace courtyard, Micah, who was 22, was with his little sister Castaspella, who was 11.

He was teaching her a few spells and even a few Illusion spells he thought could be fun for her.

All while their mother, Elara, stood close by to watch.

"C'mon Cas, one more try. Like this." Micah instructed his little sister and does another demonstration on how to draw the spell.

Castaspella nodded and followed how Micah did it. But still, she managed to draw it wrong again and the spell backfired at her.

"Urgh. I still can't draw that one right!" The young sorceress whined.

"It's alright, Cas." Micah chuckled. "Here, let's try it one more time, okay?"

Micah then stepped behind his sister and gently took a hold of her hands and helped her with the right hand motions.

Finally, now with Micah's help, Castaspella got the spell drawn right. And when she cast it, it made a shower of glowing blue magic.

"Woah!" The young sorceress exclaimed through light giggles. "That was cool!"

Micah chuckled at his sister's enthusiasm before stepping in front of her again and kneeling to her height.

"Now… How about I teach you a few illusion spells huh?" Micah grinned.

At the mention of learning illusion spells, Castaspella's face lit up. She just knew this would have to be fun!

Off to the side, their mother shook her head with a knowing smile. She knew her daughter would have too much fun with illusion spells. Just like she did when she was her age.

Micah started to move his hands, drawing up the first illusion spell.

"Alright. How about we start with this one? Just follow how I do it, Cas." He instructed.

Castaspella watched him for a moment before following the movements of her brother's hands, drawing the same illusion spell.

Before her, an illusion of a small phoenix formed. And a bigger one formed from Micah's spell.

"A… Phoenix?" Castaspella tilted her head.

"Yep. That's right, Cas. Yours is only smaller since you're still young, and new at this spell." Micah stated, but not without a smile. "But! You can still make it move around. Like this."

Micah demonstrated by moving his hands in a different direction in front of the glowing sigil. And, following the directions his hands moved, the illusion of the phoenix flew around.

Castaspella let out a gasp of awe before quickly copying Micah and having her phoenix follow his.

Elara laughed watching her kids bond over an illusion spell. It brought her joy to see them smiling loke this.

But before she could do anything else, both phoenixes flew right past her before finally dissolving into a mist of magic.

Elara smiled again and approached Micah and Castaspella.

"Having fun?" She hummed.

"Yeah! Illusion spells really are fun!" Castaspella giggles and twirls around.

"How about I teach you one next? Wouldn't that be cool?"

Castaspella quickly nodded, clearly more enthusiastic now at the idea of her mom teaching her a spell.

-Later in the day: Inside the Palace-

After a couple of hours of learning more spells from both her brother and her mother, and after eating lunch, Castaspella paced the halls, bored.

The young sorceress paced for a few minutes before coming up with an idea.

"I could totally prank Micah with those illusion spells…" Castaspella hums to herself before taking off towards Micah's chambers.

Once stopped outside the door, Castaspella pressed her ear against the door, listening for any movement within.

After she didn't hear anything for a minute, she pushed the door open and slipped inside the room.

The young sorceress glanced around for a moment before raising her hands and starting to draw an illusion spell.

It took her a couple of tries, of course, but she cast the spell. And suddenly, everything, all of Micah's stuff and his bed, was completely covered in glitter.

Castaspella giggled to herself before leaving the room, hiding around the corner just in time as Micah approached his room, unaware of the mess that awaited him inside.

Micah stepped inside his room. And the moment he glanced up, his mouth fell open.

He slowly glanced around his room, seeing all of his stuff covered in glitter.

"What in Mystacor's name…?" Micah muttered, completely shocked.

At the sight of all the glitter, his face switched to an expression of confusion. He almost started to genuinely flip out.

Micah took a slow breath. This would surely be really hard to clean up, no?

But the second he touched the glitter, intending to start getting it off of his bed first, all of it disappeared in a mist of glowing magic.

Now, he was more confused. It had been an illusion.

He thought for a moment, before starting to get the suspicion that it was Castaspella behind this prank.

But he couldn't be too sure. Yet.

-Evening: Mystacor Palace-

After a great tasting dinner of lasagna and a moon-berry pastry for dessert, Castaspella was wandering the palace halls again.

The young sorceress was quite bored again.

She had already done a bit of sketching and read a book earlier and didn't feel like doing it a second time.

Fortunately, an idea came to her. She could pull another prank on Micah using the same illusion spells.

"Yes! That would be the perfect idea!" She giggled before drawing and casting another illusion spell.

And from said illusion spell, a bunch of little birds formed.

The young sorceress was going to make the birds find and chase her brother throughout the palace.

Right on cue, Micah passed her in the same hall, completely unaware of his impending doom.

Castaspella snickered and waved her hands.

And just like that, the birds immediately began flying after Micah.

It took a moment for him to notice the birds coming after him.

But when he did notice them? He didn't get scared, but he got incredibly confused again and started running.

The birds followed him no matter how fast he ran, or where he ran to.

Micah let out a yelp when one of the birds tried to peck at him.

Little did he know, his own sister was behind this prank too.

After nearly 5 minutes of running, he skidded to a stop and tried grabbing one of the birds.

And when he touched it, the bird, or really the illusion, dissolved into a mist of magic, and so did the others.

Now, he was more confused. What in Etheria was going on?!

He was about to start moving again when he heard the sound of laughter nearby, around the corner.

Micah jumped around and finally spotted his sister, who was actively laughing.

That was when everything clicked into place.

Castaspella had been behind it all. The illusion of the glitter all over his chambers, the illusion of the birds chasing him just now.

Then, Micah smirked and ran up to his sister and wrapped his arms around her, lifting her up into his arms.

In response, Castaspella let out a squeal of laughter as she was lifted.

"So, my own sister decided to pull two different pranks on me, hm?" Micah asked, pretending to be exhausted.

Castaspella only giggled more while nodding.

"It was funny!" Castaspella exclaimed.

"Oh, betrayed by my little sister!" Micah laughed too now.

Their mother, who had coincidentally been nearby to witness this, laughed to herself with a shake of her head.

She just knew her daughter would have too much fun with those new illusion spells. And it seemed she had been right.

"How did I get so lucky with these two?" She thought to herself, even though she already had that answer.

It simply brought her joy seeing her two kids so bonded.
