Tokyo Games

by CyberWolf_1013

Summary

Adora is captain of the US Women's Basketball team: Tokyo 2021. She's on her way to do another interview in the Olympic Village when a beautiful Soccer player crosses her path. All the power and grace on the court doesn't give her a chance as she tries not to trip over herself when met with the blue and gold gaze of the US Soccer Captain.

-OR-

I've been watching the Olympics and NBC keeps showing the "Olympic Love Story" of Megan Rapino and Susan Bird.

I was inspired. Enjoy.

Notes

I was inspired by the Olympic sized build up NBC is doing of when Soccer star, Megan Rapino, and Basketball star, Susan Bird, met for the first time during the previous Summer games. And now they're America's Olympic couple or something.

They're cute.
The story of their meeting is cute.
So, I modified it a tad.

It was just about 11 o'clock as Adora crossed the intersection of a blocked off street in Tokyo. A few square blocks in the city had been built up as the 2021 Olympic Village. The modern design with the timber frames were beautiful especially when you thought about Tokyo being such a mecca of technology and business. 'It would be even better,' Adora grumbled to herself, 'if I could find the media building. I know it's around here somewhere.' She distinctly remembered the large white building being pointed out during the initial tour of the Village.

Adora looked at the map they'd all been provided with and groaned in frustration. She had to go another block over. The blonde stuffed the paper into her back pocket. She wore a pair of designer jeans and sport coat, one of her necessary interview outfits. Being the captain of US Women's Basketball it was often that she was the speaker for the team also. Luckily she was scheduled for a few interviews about the team's Olympic win over China rather than a loss. Losses were always worse to have to explain to the media.

At the sound of a familiar laugh and fast paced Japanese Adora turned around to see her best friend, Glimmer, with a pink striped phone in her hand. The camera must've been on and the purple haired Volleyball player must've been filming because as soon as Adora looked her way Glimmer laughed behind her sparkly mask and started talking again. Despite 4 years of friendship between the two and Glimmer's best efforts Adora could only pick out about every 3rd word of what was being said to the camera. "Adora" and "Basketball" seemed to be the major topic.

Glimmer waved to her and motioned to the phone. "Ohayo, Adora-chan. American kawaii suta."

Adora pulled down her favorite Strawhat logo mask to smirk and stick her tongue out at the filming girl but then she rolled her eyes and grinned playfully while giving a little wave to placate her friend. Glimmer chuckled and finally shut her camera off. "Good morning to you too." The blonde greeted with a laugh. "What are you doing?" She nodded to the pink phone case with the cherry blossom chain hanging from it.

"I'm using this to film my final video essay for my film class this year and some cute shots for my IG." Glimmer explained, her accent lighter now that she had switched to English. "Maybe after that I can tell Okaa-san that I'm switching majors. It's been so hard with her back in England and Oto-san running business in Osaka."

"Yeah, can't say I understand the parent bit, ya know." Adora shrugged as the pair stopped outside the white stone building used for media set-ups, conferences, and photoshoots. "But, at least, since you stayed with Micah you qualified to be on the Japanese Volleyball team again. It woulda sucked to be here without you."

Four years ago had been Adora's first shot at the Olympics and it was Glimmer's as well, in their respective sports, and after a rough beginning the two became good friends. Even after the 2 weeks of games had concluded they'd kept an online friendship.

Glimmer wished Adora luck in her interviews, knowing that her American friend didn't like them much. Then they had to part ways.

They promised to meet up for breakfast in the morning. Early enough before Glimmer had to catch the transport with the Volleyball team to their game and Adora had to lead practice with the Basketball team. Then Adora entered the three story building and took the elevator to the third floor where she was supposed to meet for her interviews.

Most of the rooms were empty. They were the size of business offices and small conference rooms. Some were occupied and Adora could hear different languages drifting through the doors: from Japanese to Russian to heavily accented English. The blonde made sure she had the right room number and started walking down the corridor. Just as she saw the plaque of the room she was looking for the opposite room opened and out walked a familiar face in a familiar uniform.

Adora had never met the US Women's Soccer team captain but she certainly knew her from the games she followed. Outside of a stint as goalie in junior high Adora hadn't put much attention into soccer. Basketball had always been her sport of choice, the one that called her heart, but that didn't stop her from keeping up with the sport; even now.

The Soccer team captain eyed the blonde up and down before clicking the door closed and turning to face her. Adora froze as a mesmerizing pair of mismatched eyes landed directly on her. 'Catra. Her name is Catra.' Her memory supplied, rather unhelpfully, as she couldn't think of a thing to say. She wanted to say something... as a fellow team captain, of course. 'It would be rude not to, right? Hey, nice uniform. Uh, go red, white, and blue. No. I know a good sushi place, wanna join me?' She internally cringed as her brain short circuited.

After a second the shorter brunette started to walk towards her with an air of cool nonchalance. Their eyes remained locked on each other though. Finally Adora got her mouth working as she remembered words just as the beautiful Soccer player got within arm's reach. "Sup, ready for the game?" The Basketball star automatically moved her hands into finger gun position, like an awkward 12 year old, and mentally banged her head against a wall. 'Are you serious, Adora? What a loser.'

The other woman quirked a brow and nodded in polite greeting. "Uh, yeah, we're all set." However, she kept walking down the hallway. Adora could've sunk into the newly constructed concrete of the building around her.

"Hey, Basketball Girl." Adora's heart skipped as she pivoted to look behind her and those blue and gold eyes locked onto her again. The Basketball captain shivered under that stare.

"Adora." Adora introduced herself automatically. "My name's Adora. I, uh, was hoping I could talk to you for a second. If you're not busy, of course."

"Oh, is that so? Need some advice on your jump shot?" The other woman asked. "My name's Catra, by the way. I think you knew that though." She smirked with narrowed eyes.

"Umm, yeah, I've been watching you...your team...our team...Go USA. Heh." Adora blazed red in embarrassment. Why couldn't she learn to shut her mouth?

To her surprise Catra chuckled and her expression softened into something fond. Adora took a deep breath, gathered what remained of her wits, and pressed forward one more time. "I was wondering if you'd like to meet after your game tomorrow?" Adora tensed as Catra curiously eyed her up and down. "For dinner. With me."

Catra hesitated and Adora held her breath. "Mmm, okay, 6 o'clock." She agreed with a shrug. Adora had to bite the inside of her cheek to keep the whoop of victory down but the grin still lit up her expression with excitement.

"Yeah? Okay." Adora nodded enthusiastically. She backed up a few steps, thankful she didn't trip over herself, and reached out for the door to her interview room. She was gonna be late but, all of a sudden, those few minuets didn't seem like much at all. "I...I'll see ya tomorrow. Good luck." Adora turned away with a goofyily happy wave but before she could open the door Catra stopped her.

"Hey, Basketball Girl." Adora looked over her shoulder to see a sly grin on Catra's face. "I'm still open for that jump shot advice."

End Notes

BTW, yes I made Glimmer Japanese... Or half Japanese. Angella and Micah are married but business has separated them for a time. Micah had a top knot in the show so he got the honor of living in Japan along with Glimmer. That's why she speaks Japanese and will sometimes slip back into it and is also eligible for the Olympic team.
