Angella leaned on the railing of the balcony that was attached to her room, all the buzz from earlier that day finally dying down. Staring up at the moons in the sky. She had always loved nighttime best, when the sky darkened and the moons shone clearly against the backdrop of dark blue, but tonight they were accompanied with a new, beautiful sight, stars.

It was her first time seeing them, her first night of true freedom after being rescued from the portal. To think only a few hours ago she had been trapped in its crushing loneliness, thinking she would never get to see anyone she had ever cared about again. She wrapped her wings around herself trying to shake off the cold dread that had settled on her. She was out. She was safe, and she wasn't going to be alone again.

It wasn't any use, however, as a new feeling coursed through her. Guilt. She remembered Glimmer telling her how the rebellion had beaten the horde, and the true villain, Horde Prime. As overjoyed as she was to hear that everyone was safe, one thought had coursed through her mind. I was too late. The one time she had been brave, had actually managed to save someone, had taken her away from her kingdom, from her daughter when she needed her the most. She hadn't been there when the people she cared for had to face the greatest evil in the universe, she hadn't been there when Adora had almost died at the heart of Etheria, she hadn't been there when her daughter had to fight her own father.

Oh gods, Micah. She was crying now, her arms grabbing at her sides as another stab of guilt rushed through her. He had been alive this whole time, she remembered the pure joy that had flooded through her at seeing him again, at hugging him, at feeling him cup her face with his hands and smiling at her as widely as he could. But she couldn't feel any of that joy now. All that was left was guilt.

He had been alive and she hadn't saved him, she had left him for dead this entire time. The entire time she had been at the palace, he had been struggling to survive on beast island. She had failed him, and he had forgiven her for that. She was fully sobbing now, tears were streaming down her face and her breath was coming in gasps. It had been her fault he was captured in the first place, her order that sent him into the clutches of the horde. How could he forgive her for that, did she even deserve his forgiveness? A part of her was thankful it was nighttime, so no one would be out to see her like this, another part of her hated the loneliness. Maybe it's what I deserve. She thought. For being so weak, for being such a coward.

It wasn't until an arm wrapped around her shoulders, and she heard a voice speaking softly to her, did she start to come out of her downward spiral.

"Hey Angie." a familiar, gentle voice said. "Are you back with me?"

She looked down at the face of her love, and nodded, her crying stopping.

"I walked into our room, and found you sobbing, it took you several minutes to even respond to me, what happened?" he asked, worry etched in his face.

Talking was hard. Her guilt threatened to spill over again, and the lump in her throat from crying made it hard to form words.

"How-how can you forgive me?" she finally managed to choke out.

He looked bewildered. "What do you mean?"

"You were alive this whole time, and I couldn't save you. It was my fault you were captured in the first place, and-an-"

He cut her off. "Angella, none of that was your fault, do you hear me? None, there is nothing to be forgiven, and nothing you should blame yourself for."

She blinked at him. "H-how can you say that, if I hadn't ordered that battle, you wouldn't have gotten caught and-"

He grabbed her hands. “Angie, do you trust me?”

“Of course I do.”

He smiled gently at her. “Then please trust me when I say I could never blame you for what happened, it wasn’t your fault, so please stop blaming yourself.”

He-he truly didn’t blame her? Hearing that helped lessen the guilt flowing through her, her breathing calmed and she didn’t feel as close to crying.

Micah gently wiped some of her tears away and leaned his head on her shoulder. “I love you, Angie, and there is nothing you can do that will ever make me stop loving you.”

The last of her guilt faded, replaced with a gentle warmth and a belief. A belief that maybe, just maybe, it wasn’t all her fault.

She wrapped a wing around her husband and the two gazed at the three moons hanging in the sky. She wasn’t completely better, not by a long shot. Healing would take time, but for now, she was alright. All the discussion over the throne, all the work that needed to be done to rebuild the kingdom, all the work she needed to do to feel fully fine again, could wait for a night. She smiled into the now star-filled sky, at the moons who almost seemed to smile back, at her husband, whom she loved with all her heart, and allowed herself to just be. She wasn’t the queen of Brightmoon, she wasn’t the leader of a rebellion, she wasn’t a shell of herself stuck in a portal. Tonight, right now, she was Angella.

“Feeling better?” Micah asked.

“Yes love, I think I am.” She replied

The two stood in comfortable silence for a few moments more, before she interrupted it.

“Hey Micah?”

“Yes angie?”

“I love you.” the words were barely a whisper, but she had never meant them more.

“I love you too.” He said, his voice full of warmth.

The pair stood on the balcony, finally together after years of distance, of tragedy. Husband and wife, Micah and Angella. They stood in each others arms, under the pale, comforting light of the moon.
