Mouse Chase

by HeyTorWrites

Summary

Lonnie has made great progress with building a Regiment separate from both other sides of the war since her and the boys deserted. They had soldiers, money, equipment, a growing reputation, and things were looking good for them.

Until all of their Crimson Waste contacts stop responding, and she's forced to pause everything to go investigate. In the middle of doing this though, someone decides to pay her a visit.

Out in the vastness of clear plains, two mice run along the grass blades. They search along the fields for something to eat and find that nothing bothers them on their trail. Not a snake, not a cat, nor a weasel comes across their path.

Then out of the shy shoots a Hawk, hazel and golden as it descends from above. It announces its arrival with a mighty caw before snatching one of the mice and disappearing back into the air and off towards distant skies.

It was so sudden, so quick, that the remaining mouse could barely process what had happened to its kin.

"Alright Kyle I need to go, I should only be here a few more days until I figure out what's going on"

"Ok! Me and Rogielio have got things handled over here, We have a Mayor coming in soon to talk to us so I'll update you on how that goes"

"Thanks buddy" Lonnie waves before hanging up the call and putting down her datapad on the table in front of her, pushing it aside so she can read the last reports from The Crimson Waste that they had received.

They'd gotten Radio Silence from the Wastes for 2 weeks now and it was starting to get concerning. The Pillar Regiment had found residents from the desert quite early in their creation and had more than a couple of arrangements and even some recruits from people searching for somewhere safe for business and life opportunities.

Both The Rebellion and The Horde had been a mess recently.

But since they had been talking to so many different groups and solo partners that made it all the more strange that they'd heard from none of them except the few that were on trips outside of the desert. Needless to say none of them wanted to return yet until they found out what happened.

All of the latest reports had been warnings that a man named Lashor and his gang had stopped all of their activity and people had seen the Army of a Woman named Huntara heading towards his base.

After that? Nothing. Not even a recount of how the battle went.

It was horrible timing for those two to be going at each other's throats since it meant everyone else would have to lay low for fear of being caught in the crossfire. But all of them?

That's why Lonnie was here now. She was usually the one out of her, Kyle, and Rogi that was on her feet and travelling between their bases, hopefully they would be stable enough soon that she wouldn't have to do it anymore even if the lessened workload would leave her a bit bored.

Right now though, she was supposed to be in Dryl to talk to some fellow Deserters that offered their help with the machinery side of their growing army as they were Horde soldiers but not all engineer experts. Instead, she was here, dealing with this bullshit.

"Should we send a team over to see if they can get an idea of what went wrong?" A man sitting in a chair next to her asks.

This was Dainn, the person she had put in charge of this Trading outpost. He had sounded confused but for the most part scared when he had called her for help. The elkman had been wary of the Horde having ambushed the Waste and had proposed that they were cracking down on deserters because of desperation during the war and looking for people to make examples out of, that they should pack and dismantle this outpost in case someone was on their way to detain them.

It wasn't impossible. The Crimson Waste was right next to The Fright Zone, if they wanted to find runaways it was the most sensible place to look. But their scouts hadn't seen any activity from The Horde nor The Rebellion in this area except for the newly formed Plumerian Forces under She-ra's temporary command.

Bang

All heads in the room turn to see Mort, Dainn's second, with his head laid on the table and a hand in his hair, "Moons…this is gonna set us behind a bit isn't it?"

It was.

Lonnie sighs. "I don't think we should yet. It's either there's something going on that's turned them against us or someone is stopping them from contacting anyone outside, either way it would probably just be sending people to their deaths. If anyone we send even make it through the desert that is"

Thana turns around where she was sitting at her desk, she was the one in charge of keeping track of this outpost's supplies, "Are we sure The Rebellion isn't involved? We know they've been changing things up recently"

"No no, The Kingdom of Snow and Brightmoon are the only Kingdoms not under intense fire right now and Bright's still trying to find a new General after Juliet kicked the bucket. They're not doing much but defending their territory and well, the Snow's are too far. Why would they bother with the Wastes anyway?" Mave shuts down as he stretches in his chair, he kept track of the soldiers that travelled to and from the outpost and was responsible for the defense of this place.

They could go back and forth all day about what could've happened, but for now she needed to plan for what's to come if no one ever got back to them.

"Help! Help, Someone! Please!"

A voice screaming outside causes the collective group of people in the room to stand and rush to the window to get a view of what was happening outside.

A man runs from the trees, his face wet from overflowing tears and his armor bloodied from the hole where his arm was supposed to be.

Lonnie squints at him, "Who's that?"

"Uh…one of the men from the Caravan we just sent out…." Mave mutters, unfocused as they all stare at the blood following the panicking guard's trail and tainting his boots.

Other workers from the outpost run out to meet him but they freeze and point at the direction he had run from.

Something had followed him from the woods.

He barely gets to turn around before a hand with a golden ring with a blue gem on its middle finger rams and shoves through him, gripping the majority of his inner torso in its palm before it retracts and drops it, leaving his body to tarnish the grass when the rest of him falls.

The yard soon descends into madness after that.

Screams ring out as people run from all directions, no one cared where they were going as long as it was away from The Thing currently trying to murder them. Each is caught and slaughtered as a blur rushes through the dropping bodies and towards the building The Five were standing in.

Rifles are drawn and fired as the remaining people in the field try to defend themselves but none seem to hit their mark and the few that did didn't seem to slow it down in the slightest.

Another guard in it's wake tries to run inside for safety but one swing brings both the door and the wall tumbling down to reveal the cowering inhabitants of the Outpost climbing over each other in their attempts to escape. The Beast grabs and yanks at the woman's throat until it's peeled away like yarn and she's gurgling on the overflowing liquid starting to clog the now exposed airway.

The Figure disappears into the mass of fleeing bodies and out of the window's sight as a quake rumbles the entirety of the Outpost and leaves them stumbling with the sound of rumbling debris and falling beams ringing out from across the building.

A voice starts to echo off the walls as more shots are fired and thump after thump and crack after crack is heard every time a body is slung, crushed, or dropped in the hallway only getting closer and closer.

"What have they done to my Sweet Rosalie? What have they done to my Sweet Rosalie?"

It's careless, absentminded as The Monster barrels through anyone and any wall in its path as people from downstairs run up to help only to retreat straight back down when they see the hurricane bashing through their coworkers. Thana breaks the silence,

"What the fuck….?"

"What the hell is that?!" Mort yells as he steps back and reaches for his rifle.

"Does it fucking Matter?!" Dainn curses.

"No one can love her half as much as me. What have they done to my Sweet Rosalie?"

They didn’t have much time nor options.

Lonnie was frozen in her spot, trying to catch up with whatever she just saw and The Danger that was coming towards them. She really wished that she'd gone to Dryl when she had the chance.

Was she going to die here?

"Love is a white room that cures every ill, the thicker the heart, the stronger the pill. What have they done to my Sweet Rosalie?"

She couldn’t. The Pillar Regiment was still in the growing stages and the War was at its peak. Most importantly, Rogi and Kyle needed her. She needed them.

“What are we going to do?!” Mort yells.

“What do you think? Arm yourself fool!” Mave snarls as he pushes the chairs around to search for his helmet.

“We’re not going to be able to land a single hit on that thing!” Thana argues.

"Boss no offense but it would be real great if you said something right about now" Dainn sweats as he shakes her shoulder.

"I'm mad about her, and she's crazy for me"

They only get a second to react.

The door and its hinges are smashed to bits and Mave's head is slammed into the wooden table as it splits and comes undone under his weight. It breaks in two along with his skull and spine as the splinters bend and sink into his body.

Lonnie is quick to slide over and hide behind one of the boxes sitting near the back of the room, the last shipments from the Wasters that they had planned to look through for any possible hidden clues or messages. It seemed trivial now and far from her mind as she ducks and covers her head, bravery or stupidity leading her to peek out from the side of the Boxes rim.

The Monster turns and slams the expanse of its fist into Thana and sends her crashing clean through the ground, the impact against her chest killing her before she reaches the bottom floor.

Mort had stumbled and dropped his gun in his attempt to evade The Thing's explosive entrance and now he holds himself up by the remains of the caved in table so he can unsheathe his sword. It does him nothing good as the sword is soon grasped along with his hand and he's impaled with the tip of the blade being embedded straight through his center and into the floorboards, keeping him elevated with his back in a permanent arch under its hilt.

Dainn skitters and frantically scoots away on the ground, glancing in Lonnie's direction and incentivizing her to get further back and hopefully out of sight.

Two fingers pinch his throat and lift his body up for inspection as The Beast gets a good look at him.

It's reverberating voice comes out like a spoken rumble as it speaks, "Hm…yes, you'll do"

Fingers search along his midsection until they find perch in a spot they like and twist, squeezing and pulling the skin as ribbons of flesh stretch and tear from his stomach. They elongate like string as their desperate and fragile hold is separated and the piece of meat is flung into waiting jaws.

The Beast hardly gets a feel for the taste before he's held to the floor they continue to dig in, not minding the fabric as its hands rip and yank to further fuel their gut. They break his limbs like bread and feed them to crushing teeth that slides every last bit of him down it's gullet with blood that paints it's cheeks and spills down it's chin.

Lonnie presses her back against her cover, her eyes wide and her muscles tense as she tries her best not to make a sound. She recognized that voice and cape, she knew The Monster that was feasting itself on one of her officers. Or at least, who it was.

Had The Alliance found them? Decided that they were too much of a threat and sent their dog to take them out? Was this what happened to The Crimson Waste?

The air is taken from her lungs as the box is ripped away and she's left to fall against the floor, exposed and unprepared as the pain shoots up her back and she's thrown back into a living nightmare.

By the time she looks up Death stares her in the eyes with gleeful dilated pupils that shine a spotlight directly on top of her and zeros in on her face.

The soldier couldn't move, her joints locked into place under the gaze toiling a bell above her head. Lonnie wasn't ready to die, but Death was a greedy thing that could only stand to be patient for so long before it pounced.

But the blue and yellow in each of it's eyes gleam in recognition and The Figure rises, "Lonnie!" It smiles.

All is silent for just a moment as all she could do was stare.

Heavy boots step back and wait for her to stumble to her feet, their tail twitching with interest when she finally manages to right herself.

"Adora…" Lonnie mutters as she tries to catch her bearings.

"Well you're half right" She-ra corrects with a voice that was filled to the brim with amusement while they rest their hands on their hips.

"Uh huh…" She grunts.

"Sorry about that Lon, didn't know this place was one of yours, thought it was one of the Rebellion's" The Murderer apologizes with a wave of their hand and a chuckle, "Simple mistake on our part"

"Don't you work for the Rebellion?" Lonnie has to grip her beating chest to try to come back to her senses, the wall the only thing keeping her from dropping to the floor.

She-ra glances down at her with a gleam in their eye and a smile that shows their stained teeth, "With. We don't discriminate"

Lonnie swallows.

"Say…" The Warrior surveys their carnage with a hand on their chin, "Were they important?"

"Yes" The woman grits through her teeth.

"Unfortunate." They shrug, "Well as much as we'd like to chat this was more of a pit stop and we have to go, we'll send you whatever you need to replace the damages"

Lonnie watches them walk to the window and punch through it, sending most of the wall exploding out as the glass shatters under their feet.

The Champion turns, "Oh yeah, and if a brown haired woman with feathers on her arms and a bird tail comes to visit you, she works for us. We'll keep in contact through her," and with that they hop down to the grass waiting below and become a blur once more before The Threat is gone completely, just as quick as it had arrived.

Lonnie couldn't stop herself from sliding to her knees and pressing her face into the palms of her hands. The room reeked from the filth and a pool of blood was gathering that would soon reach her if she didn't move. She can hear the yells and cries of the few survivors that were left untouched in She-ra's rush upstairs, supposedly planning to finish them off once they were done killing the chain of command.

She wasn’t new to death, far from it. But this wasn’t a fight nor a battle, just a senseless massacre, and she had nearly become a part of it.

Lonnie could hear them rushing through the tattered halls and shredded bodies, lost and looking for guidance.

But they’d have to look a little longer, she needed a second.

End Notes

Thanks for reading! I'm not used to writing gore or fighting scenes even though this series is going to have a good bit of it so if it's a bit underwhelming I'm sorry.

I forgot to add She-ra's ring TWICE but yeah She-ra usually has the Sword of Protection as a ring on her finger. As you'll see, they prefer not to use it much.

Thank you for reading! Hopefully this post was a good length sorry they're all so short I'm trying not to have a million posts for the series cause I know people won't read them and I've already meshed some posts that kinda fit the same time frame together so there's less clutter.

Please drop by the Archive and comment to let the creator know if you enjoyed their work!
