“Go get me a bottle of whiskey, Kyle!” The furry woman shouted.

“On it, Mrs. Weaver!” he replied timidly before dashing out of the office. Catra Weaver owned quite a few businesses, but she preferred to spend her time in the office in the back of her nightclub, the Wild Cosmos. Then, a very sexy female police chief barged into her office.

“Mrs. Weaver, Mayor Moon has requested we check the premises for illegal activity again.” The woman groaned.

“Oh Chief Grey, what a lovely surprise!” Catra flirted. She picked up a bag of Dreamdust (Brightmoon’s most popular drug) and tossed it on the table. “I sure hope she doesn't mean this!”

“Might have to cuff you for that one.” Chief Grey replied, before walking over and sitting on Catra’s lap. They began making out almost immediately.

Kyle walked back in with the whiskey. “Got your whiskey, Mrs. Weaver!” He announced. Upon seeing Chief Grey, he added, “Oh, hi Adora.”

“Leave it on the desk!” Catra ordered. Kyle did as he was told, and then left the room. It wasn’t long before the two women were clothesless and panting.

Even if Catra wasn't secretly married to the head of Brightmoon's police department, she would probably still control the town. Between the nightclub, her illegal dealings, and her condos in both Brightmoon and Frightsville, she had as much money, if not more than even the Moon family. She wasn't exactly in the top ten richest people in Etheria, but she could pay people enough money to bend the rules to her liking. And most people knew it.

Suddenly, a knock on Catra's door interrupted the amazing sex she was having. She put on a shirt, and directed Adora under the table. "What is it, Kyle?" She yelled.

"Tung Lashor is here! He's got ten crates of Dreamdust from the Crimson Wastes."

"Then pay him and tell him to fuck off!" Catra growled.

"He is insisting on talking to you." Kyle replied.

"Fine, send him in." Catra muttered. She squirmed as Adora began inserting her tongue between the folds of her pussy.

"Mrs. Weaver, times are tough, as you know. The Crimson Wastes are becoming more and more hostile, and I'd like a higher cut so I can upgrade my security."

"How much?"

"Ten Percent." Lashor replied. Catra laughed.

"Ten percent? Hell no. You can have six percent when or if you can get me Dreamdust that is more than 80% pure.

"But…" Lashor started, before being cut off by Catra letting loose a moan. He then spotted feet under her desk.

"Oh, I see I'm interrupting." He stated smugly.

"Don't get any funny ideas." Catra warned. "Get Dr. Dryl to test your shit. If it's any purer than 80%, you can have your 2% raise.

Now get out of here before I leave you stranded naked in the middle of the desert again.” Catra barked.

“Yes, Ma’am.” Lashor anxiously replied before darting out of the room.

A laugh sounded from underneath the desk. “You really have some creative ways of keeping people in line.” Adora murmured.

“Did I say stop?” Catra asked.

“And as I run for mayor once again, I promise to work towards a brighter future where everyone in Brightmoon can earn a livable wage, and decrease homelessness!” Glimmer Moon announced. Most of the reporters at the conference raised their hands and began shouting.

“What about the Dreamdust problem!?” One reporter asked.

“Chief Grey and I are working tirelessly to find the source, and we will eradicate it ASAP.” Mayor Moon replied.

“Mayor Moon, what are your thoughts on Dr. Netossa J Brown running against you?” Another reporter shouted.

“She’s a respected woman in her field, and I support many of the same ideas as she does. We just have different views on how to get there.” she replied. “That’s all the questions for today.” She announced, and then disappeared into her limo, where her husband waited for her. She groaned as soon as the reporters wouldn’t be able to hear her.

“That well?” Archer Moon, or more lovingly referred to as Bow, asked coyly.

“I just wish I could stop this stupid drug crisis!” she complained.

“About that…” Bow murmured.

“What?”

“Dr. Brown’s campaign just released a new video.” Bow stated, pulling out his laptop.

Dr. Brown was on a stage with her wife standing behind her to the side. “This Dreamdust crisis has been a problem within our city for three and a half years, and Mayor Moon hasn’t been able to stop it. I think it’s time for Brightmoon to have a change in leadership! And I’m going to start with ending the corruption in Brightmoon’s Police Force!”

“Corruption in the Police Force? This isn’t Frightsville!” Glimmer complained.

“Well, polls are showing that after that speech 47% of people support her, which is closer than any candidate to beating a Moon has gotten since General Johnson challenged your father back in ‘89”

“There isn’t any corruption in the Force though. I put Adora of all people in charge! No way she’d let anything like this slide!”

“I think you put more faith in her than you should.” Bow replied. “Not that I don’t think she’s doing her best, but she isn’t omnipotent. There’s so many ranks between her and the beat cops on the streets that could be hiding things from her. Not to mention, if the Force was perfect, don’t you think we would’ve put a better limit on drugs coming into the city?”

“We make ten drug arrests per day!” Glimmer replied.

“Yeah, low-level dealers and street punks. We haven’t been able to get any information out of them either. Whoever is behind this drug ring scares them a lot more than life in prison, apparently.”

“Mrs. Weaver, Lashor is back!” Kyle announced.

“Goddamnit. Send him in!” She muttered into the radio. He opened the door and strolled in confidently.

“So… about that raise.”

“Dr. Dryl just sent me the report. Your shit is weaker than last time! 41%? You insult me.”

“As I said, times are hard.” He replied.

“Yeah, not good enough.” Catra growled. She took out her pistol. “Hey Kyle, get the hydrogen peroxide.” She muttered into her walkie.

Stuck-Up Mayors

Chapter Summary

Catra goes out to the Crimson Wastes, Adora gets into an argument with Glimmer.

Chapter Notes

tw/cw: mild homophobia

Adora was taking an afternoon nap in her office when her cell phone began to ring, startling her from her sleep.

"Hey, Adora, I'm going out to the Crimson Wastes for a business trip."

"Oh, okay! I'd come with but I'm sort of busy at the moment. The 'Queen' is on her way to my office right now." Adora responded cheerfully.

"I never understood how you could be friends with such a prissy snob." Catra muttered.

"She's… sort of an acquired taste. But she cares about her loved ones deeply."

"Speaking of love… I love you, Adora."

“I’m sorry, did I just hear the big bad Catra say something sweet?”

“Adora!”

“I love you too, Cat.” Adora chuckled before hanging up the phone.

Then, about a minute later, Glimmer burst into her office. “Adora!”

“Hey, Glimmer. Would it kill you to knock?” Adora groaned.

Then, Adora’s secretary, Scorpia, ran in. “Sorry boss, she pushed right past me!”

“It’s okay Scorp, hold any other meetings until we’re finished.” Adora replied.

“You got it!” Scorpia exclaimed before running back down the hall. Glimmer shut the door and then sat at the chair across from Adora.

“Did you see my latest campaign speech?” Glimmer asked.

“Yeah, I thought you did fine.”

“What’s your status on the drug issue?” Glimmer questioned pointedly.

“Same as I’ve been telling you. Some low-level arrests have been made, but we can’t get any information out of them. All we know is that the city’s main supplier is that gang calling themselves ‘The Horde’.” Adora responded.

“And where is this Horde’s base of operations?” Glimmer asked.

“I don’t know. I’ve seen a few of them at the Cosmos club, but I’ve raided it three times and found nothing.” Adora answered. “Ms. Weaver told me she’s filing a lawsuit to sue the city for the missed income on those nights if we try it again.”

“Damn it.” Glimmer growled. “That dyke is just as shady as her mother. She’s probably just great at hiding it.” Adora narrowed her eyes.

“Watch it, Glimmer. You and I both know she helped us put her mom in prison five years ago. In fact, the Wild Cosmos is cleaner than ever, and one of the city’s biggest money-makers after she took over. She has donated to your campaign multiple times!” Adora snapped.

"Whatever. Just bust the Horde or we'll both lose our jobs." Glimmer retorted, before walking out and slamming the door.

"Bitch." Adora muttered. Three minutes later, she received a call that she knew was coming.

"Hey, Adora." Bow greeted. "What happened?"

"Your wife insulted her biggest campaign donor and I called her out on her BS, as usual."

"She's super stressed right now, you know she doesn't mean it. Dr. Brown's got 47% in the polls."

"Doesn't give her the right to call Ms. Weaver a 'dyke' in front of her very lesbian 'friend'." Adora growled.

"She said what !?" Bow yelled. "Alright, I'll talk to her. I'm so sorry, Adora." He hung up the phone shortly thereafter. The Moon household would not be quiet that evening, Adora thought.

A black SUV pulled up at a local bar in the Crimson Wastes. The desert was hot, especially at this time of year. Catra stepped out, and her staff, one of which being Rogelio, followed her. "Let's do this."

She walked into the bar and everybody went quiet as they noticed her. “I’m looking for a new supplier!” She yelled.

“What happened to Lashor?” one man asked. Catra smirked, and two of her staff flung a bodybag onto the middle of the floor.

“His quality and supply started dropping, and he asked for a damn raise.”

“Give me 8% and you’ll have the best D-Dust in Etheria.” A gruff voice sounded from the back of the bar. A large woman stepped out. “The name’s Huntara. It’s a pleasure to meet you, Ms. Weaver.”

“Show me what you got.” Catra replied. She and Rogelio followed Huntara into the back of the store.

In the back, people were mass producing D-Dust as if they were producing an everyday product. “Oh, hey Cat!” a very familiar voice sounded from across the room.

“I was out here to test these goods for my husband, you know how it is.” Entrapta replied. “Huntara wasn’t lying though, this is purer than anything I've seen."

"Good to know. How is Johnny these days?"

"Oh, you know, still riding the high of owning the criminal underworld of Frightsville while also being mayor in daylight. You know he asks people to call him Hordak now?"

Catra laughed. "Yeah, I heard. Nice to see you, 'Trapta."

"Nice to see you, Cat." Entrapta responded, before leaving.

"So… Do we have a deal?" Huntara asked.

"8%." Catra answered, reaching out to shake Huntara's hand.

The rest of Adora's day was pretty boring. She didn't really have much to do besides paperwork.

That is, until she got a call from Glimmer that evening. "Hey, Adora, I just wanted to apologize for what I said earlier. I wasn't thinking."

"When do you ever think?" Adora asked.

"I'm trying to apologize!" Glimmer whined. Bow's voice could be heard in the background but Adora couldn't make out what he said. "Alright, I deserve that one. How can I make it up to you?"

"I mean, a paid vacation to Mystacor would be great."

"Fine." Glimmer muttered.

Adora hung up and then immediately called Catra. "Honey, you wanna go to Mystacor with me?"

Solutions

Chapter Summary

Confrontations lead to solutions.

Glimmer and Bow watched the news from their couch. What would have been a peaceful night for the couple soon turned to be anything but. “Dr. Netossa Brown demands total police reform and an immediate recall vote for Glimmer moon.” The anchor announced. The feed cut to Dr. Brown’s speech.

“For too long the drug arrests have not been able to lead to a source, and when things are worse than ever, Glimmer Moon pays for her police chief’s vacation to Mystacor!?” Dr. Brown shouted.

“How the fuck did she find out about that?” Glimmer asked.

“I don’t know…” Bow murmured in response.

As the crowd stopped cheering, Netossa started speaking again. “We should be replacing both Mayor Moon and Chief Grey! Once someone non-corrupt is Chief, I will work with them to weed out the rest of the corruption in the Force, and finally bring peace to the streets of Brightmoon!”

“Fuck. I’m guessing the polls aren’t in my favor anymore.” Glimmer muttered.

Bow whipped out his cell phone. He began typing immediately. Glimmer's phone rang. "Hey Glimmer, how's it going?" her father asked.

"Absolutely perfect evening I'm having, actually." Glimmer replied sarcastically.

"Yeah, we saw the news broadcast too." Micah sighed.

"I bet you have the same problems though, Mr. President." Glimmer joked.

"You're not wrong." He chuckled. "Just remember, you'll be okay even if you do lose. Being mayor isn't everything, and you'll still have a future in politics."

"Thanks, Dad. Love you."

"Love you too, kiddo. Hang in there." He replied, and the call was over.

"You need to get back here, now ." Bow ordered. Glimmer looked over and realized he was probably on the phone with Adora. "I don't care if it isn't fair, Dr. Brown found out we paid for it and she's starting a vote to immediately recall you and Glimmer." Bow hung up the phone. He turned to Glimmer and muttered, “She’ll be back tomorrow afternoon.”

“Great. Now what?”

“We’ll come up with something.”

“Shit.” Catra muttered.

“I don’t care much for my job anyway.” Adora murmured.

“And when a new chief gets hired, what’ll happen to my business?”

“Oh. Shit.”

“Dummy.” Catra teased.

“Only for you.” Adora replied.

“I have a plan, actually.”

“You do? What is it?”

“I can’t tell you! You’re a cop!”

“The top cop, actually.” Adora corrected.

Recall day came swiftly. Citizens were lined up at voting booths all over the city. The polls showed that 49% of people wanted a change in leadership, 48% supported Glimmer, and the other 3% were undecided, so all Glimmer could really do was wait.

So, for the entire day, she tried to keep her mind occupied by anything else, whether that be making herself food or cleaning her house or texting her husband. He came home at 5 o’clock, and they went straight to the bedroom. They’d see the results in the morning.

They woke up at 9 o'clock that same night, when both of their phones buzzed. The recall had failed, 2,000,000 voted no on the recall as opposed to the 1.25 million that voted to kick Glimmer out.

They decided to celebrate by going out to a fancy nightclub, which just so happened to be the Wild Cosmos. She and Bow were dancing when out of the corner of her eye, she noticed Adora slip into the employee only section of the building. “Bow, Adora’s here!” Glimmer pointed out. He nodded and they followed her over, but they were stopped by security.

“Hey, Staff only!” A buff woman with dreadlocks shouted.

“But I just saw Chief Grey!”

“She’s allowed into the back, not you Mrs. Mayor.” she retorted.

“I’m the mayor! Tell Ms. Weaver I would like to meet with her.” Glimmer fired back. The girl glared at her, and then radioed in the situation.

“Okay, you can go back. Only you, though. Second door on your left.” The bouncer growled. Glimmer walked into the hallway and found herself at the supposed door. She walked in.

“Why, if it isn’t Mayor Glimmer Moon! To what do I owe this surprise visit?” Catra asked.

“I saw Chief Grey and I was looking for her.” Glimmer replied.

“Oh, yeah, she’s a regular.” Catra stated. “I thought you were here for something else.”

“And what would that be?”

“To thank me, of course.” Catra teased. “For the big win.”

“Why would I thank you ?” Glimmer questioned.

“For the extra 250,000 votes that magically appeared at around 7 o’clock earlier in favor of Glimmer Moon! You can go ask your statistics major of a husband, if you’d like.”

“Why would you tell me that, even if it was true?”

“Because what would you do about it? Go to the police?” Catra snickered.

“I don’t think you’d find that very helpful.” Adora joined in. Glimmer whirled around to see Adora standing next to the door.

“What the…”

“Yeah, calling my wife a ‘dyke’ was not a smart move, Glim.” Adora joked.

“Wife?”

“Yeah, we’re married. Two big reveals tonight, I suppose.” Catra declared.

“Why are you telling me any of this?” Glimmer asked.

“Because, I wanted you to know who really runs this town.” Catra answered. “Me.” Catra and Adora both broke into laughter. That’s when Glimmer noticed a baggie of Dreamdust on Catra’s desk, next to a jacket with The Horde’s logo on it. Everything suddenly fit together and it hit Glimmer like a train.

“So all this time…”

“You let this happen, so I’m giving you a chance to be complicit, or you can try and tell someone, and we’ll replace you.” Catra offered. She snapped her fingers. “Just like that.”

“But if you replace me that leaves…”

“Oh, Dr. Netossa Brown will never win. I could run in your place, or maybe my friend Huntara from the Crimson Wastes! Either way, it’s a huge win for the lgbt community.” Catra disclosed.

“And let The Horde take over a whole city!?” Glimmer argued.

“News flash: We already control this city, and Frightsville for that matter. The two biggest cities on this side of the planet!”

“I’ll tell Netossa, and we’ll work together to take you down! I would have never promoted Adora if I’d known!”

“Oh, you won’t make it through that door if I don’t let you.” Catra teased.

“Yeah, you have two options. Play along, or both you and your lovely husband will disappear .” Adora added. Glimmer stared at her. She tried to throw a punch, but Adora kicked low and swept her feet out from under her. “Wrong choice, Glim. Sorry it had to end this way, but you’ve always been such a snobby pain in the ass.” Adora whispered.

“Security, quietly make sure Mr. Moon ‘disappears’ from the premises.” Catra ordered over her radio. Unfortunately for the Moons, the music in the club was too loud for anyone to hear a gunshot in the back or a man being pulled into the freezer against his drunken will.

The next day, Glimmer's private jet crashed just off the coast of Salineas, and neither her body nor her husband's were recovered from the wreckage. A new mayoral candidate popped up, a Sheriff from the Wastes who was an expert on fighting the war against drugs and also an out lesbian. Polls showed she was very popular with the citizens of Brightmoon. She also received a sizable donation to her campaign from the Weaver Foundation.

EBI

Chapter Summary

> The Etherian Bureau of Investigations comes to town to investigate.

When Micah couldn't get ahold of Glimmer to congratulate her for her victory over the recall, he was slightly worried, but he figured she was just out celebrating or sleeping. When he couldn't contact her the next day, he was far more worried. Then, he got news of the crashed jet. He immediately phoned the Etherian Bureau of Investigations.

"So, the President's daughter, the mayor of their home city, died in a plane crash and we're investigating in Brightmoon… why?" Mermista asked.

" Because their bodies weren't found in the wreckage, and the timing is highly suspicious." Perfuma replied.

"Not to mention Director Spella is the President's sister." Mara added.

"And why did you come along, again?" Mermista groaned.

“Because I used to be a cop in this town, I know it better than you two.” Mara replied.

Mermista opened her mouth to speak, but it was quickly covered by Perfuma’s hand. “How about we stop bickering and start planning?” Perfuma suggested.

“Works for me.” Mara replied. “Well, what do we know?”

“Glimmer’s phone was last active in a party club called the Wild Cosmos.” Mermista answered.

“We also know she was almost recalled over sending her Chief of Police on vacation while the citizens were upset about the drug rates.” Perfuma added.

“So, we talk to the staff at the Wild Cosmos and Chief Grey. Any potential suspects?” Mara queried.

“Her political opponent, Dr. Netossa Brown could’ve had something to do with it. I can’t put the blame on anyone else without more information.”

“Then we talk to her too. That’s three people to talk to, and there’s three of us.” Mara stated.

“I’ll take the club staff.” Mermista announced.

“I’ll talk to the political rival.” Perfuma offered.

“Perfect. It’s about time I catch up with Chief Grey.” Mara declared.

“You know her?”

“She was my rookie, some 20 years ago.”

“Chief Grey, you’ve got a visitor from the EBI.” Scorpia announced over the intercom.

“Send them in.” Adora answered. What she wasn’t expecting was a very familiar face.

“What’s up, Rookie?” Mara teased.

“Mara? Is it my birthday or somethin’?” Adora asked.

“I wish. I’m here on official business.” Mara responded.

“Oh. You’re here about Mayor Moon, yeah?”

“Yeah. How are you doing, though? Even back then, I know y’all were pretty close.”

“Honestly? I’m still in disbelief. She was in my office last week.” Adora replied.

“Right before she sent you on vacation?”

Adora chuckled. “Yeah, I was super stressed about this whole D-Dust crisis and she came in and told me to take a break. When I told her I didn’t need one, she sweetened the deal.”

“How come you came back early?” Mara questioned.

“Glimmer told me about the recall, I flew right back to support her.”

“So… when was the last time you saw her?”

“When she gave me the ticket to Mystacor. I couldn’t get a hold of her by the time I got into town.”

Mermista surveyed the club. It wasn’t busy yet, as it was only 5 o’clock in the evening, but this was very much the kind of place that would be packed after the sun was set. She marched over to the first staff member she could find, a woman about the same size as her with very cool dreadlocks. Her name badge read, ‘Lonnie.’

“Hey, Lonnie, I need to talk to your boss.” Mermista declared, pulling out her badge.

Lonnie’s eyes widened, before her face shifted into a look of curiosity. She reached for her radio and whispered, “Weaver, EBI is here.”

Lonnie turned toward the back of the club and motioned for Mermista to follow. They went into a long hallway through a guarded door that had one camera pointed on it from the inside of the hallway. They went to the second door on the left, and Lonnie waited outside while Mermista walked in. The woman at the desk was wearing a very nice and likely very expensive suit. She looked Mermista up and down and smirked. “EBI, huh? Wouldn’t be my first guess.”

“Weaver, as in Sharon Weaver?” Mermista replied.

“Unfortunately, yes. I was assuming this visit had something to do with the wretched bitch, but if you were unsure of our relation… why exactly are you here?” The feline asked.

“Mayor Glimmer Moon’s last known location. I’m here to get your security footage, and ask if you saw her three nights ago.”

“Three nights ago… I was occupied with other business.”

“So, you weren’t here?”

“I didn’t say that. I was here, but I never left this room.”

“And the tapes?”

“Yeah, yeah.” she muttered. “Rogelio, get the tapes from Thursday night, would ya?” She growled into her walkie.”

That night, the EBI squad regrouped at the police station. “Dr. Brown denies any involvement.” Perfuma announced.

“Chief Grey was devastated, I didn’t learn much more than that.” Mara added.

“I have something.” Mermista announced. “I watched the tapes. Glimmer and Bow were definitely there that night. More interestingly, so was Chief Grey. She went straight to the back, and wasn’t even stopped by security at the heavily guarded door to the back rooms. Guess we need to talk to her again, right?”

Mara sighed and headed towards the elevator. On the top floor, they noticed Scorpia packing up her things. “Hey, guys! Can I help you with anything?”

“We just need to speak with the Chief.” Mermista answered.

“You’re in luck! She hasn’t left yet.” Scorpia exclaimed. The group walked over to Adora’s door and walked in.

“Hey Mara, what’s up?” Adora asked. “Oh, you two must be her new colleagues, I’m Chief Adora Grey.” Adora announced, reaching out her hand. Perfuma shook it, but Mermista refused.

“You said the last time you had seen Glimmer was when she gave you the ticket?” Mara asked sternly.

“Yeah, why?”

“Because you were in the same room Thursday night.” Mermista declared.

“At the Cosmos?” Adora asked. “I had no idea!”

“So you didn’t see her?” Mara asked.

“No, I didn’t.”

“What were you doing there?” Perfuma asked.

“Oh, uh… I was meeting with Ms. Weaver.”

“Meeting? More like fucking.” Mermista suggested. Adora was bright red.

“You, and Weaver !?” Mara asked.

“Yeah… We’re sort of married…” Adora whispered.

“You’re what !?” Mara screeched. “And you didn’t invite me?”

“We didn’t invite anyone . It’s supposed to stay a secret! It wouldn’t look great in the media if the Chief of Police was in love with Shadow Weaver’s daughter.” Adora explained.

“Did Glimmer know?” Mermista asked.

“No. Nobody knew! How did you know?” Adora asked.

“Well, that woman was quite clearly a lesbian. She ain’t hiding shit with those specifically trimmed nails on her middle and ring fingers. She also said she was too preoccupied that night to have noticed the mayor, and we have the security footage showing you walking into the offices like you owned the joint. Not too hard to get from A to B.” Mermista analyzed.

“Despite Mermista’s… crude wording… She really does have a gift for this kind of thing.” Perfuma pointed out.

“So… what now?” Adora asked.

“Well, you’re not a suspect. We’re just making sure that the plane wreck was actually an accident.” Mara explained. “So, you’re free to go.”

Adora nodded and started for the door. “Bye, Mara.” She called.

“Later, Rookie.” Mara sighed.

“So… Glimmer didn’t know. What if she found out? Would Adora kill just to cover it up?” Mermista asked.

“No way! Glimmer and Adora have been best friends since long before I met her, so at least 20 years.” Mara responded.

“If my best friend of twenty years didn’t tell me she got married, I’d kill her. You think it could’ve been a self-defense thing?” Mermista asked.

“Why do you keep trying to pin it on her ? Adora isn’t a killer! She felt bad every time she shot someone back in the days on the streets, even when it was someone shooting back at us.”

“What about the secret wife?” Perfuma asked.

“Well, how about we see if the plane was tampered with before we go down that road?”

“Oh, the data came back an hour ago. The plane crashed at 16:50 Salinean time. The pilot was dead at least half an hour earlier .” Mermista revealed.

“When were you going to tell us?” Mara hissed.

“Just did.” Mermista retorted.

“How did he die?” Perfuma asked.

“That’s the fun part! D-Dust overdose.”

“So… he was flying under the influence?”

“No. With the amount he had in his system even after being underwater for an hour? He was dead within minutes. So, either he was suicidal and trying to kill somebody, or…”

“Someone killed the pilot. Were all the parachutes accounted for?”

“All but two.” Mermista answered.

“So… either Glimmer and Bow faked their own deaths or someone went through a very elaborate plan to cover it up.” Mara determined.

“Well, there are fingerprints that don’t belong to Glimmer or Bow in that plane.” Mermista informed.

“Whose?”

“Grey’s.”

“Scorpia!” Mara shouted.

“Yes, Ma’am?”

“I want this building on lockdown. Make sure Chief Grey doesn’t leave.”

The squad hurried down the stairs to the lobby, where Adora was impatiently standing at the front door. “What is this all about?” Adora asked.

“Your prints on a plane that crashed.” Mermista answered.

“How do you think I got back from Mystacor so quickly? Glimmer sent her private jet for me!” Adora explained.

“So, you were on the jet the day before it crashed, then in the same room as Moon and her husband, and didn’t know it or have anything to do with their disappearance? You see how suspicious that looks, Chief?”

“Ordinarily, yes. Glimmer was my best friend, though. No shit she let me borrow a ride on her jet! And I already told you I wasn’t there to party or mingle. I didn’t see her. Can I go now?”

“Where are you off to in such a hurry?” Mara asked.

“Where do you think?” Adora growled.

“So… it was either Dr. Brown or the Horde.” Perfuma stated.

“My money’s on Brown. Find out how she found out Glimmer paid for my trip to Mystacor, while you’re at it. You still owe me.” Adora declared, before leaving the station.

Adora collapsed on her couch. It had been a long day, and despite not being the greatest actress, she managed to convince the EBI of her innocence. For today, at least.

"Hey, Adora~" Catra called in a sing-song voice. "Welcome home!"

"Catra! I thought you'd be in your office tonight."

"I was, but a visit from the feds kinda drives off business. Not from the club, of course." Catra joked.

"Yeah, tell me about it. They were grilling me all day."

"They think you did it?"

"Well, they knew Glimmer was at the club on thursday, they knew I was there after getting your tapes… wait, if they have the tapes how don't they know?"

"Dr. Dryl did a little video editing, and her little AI program can do some really magical stuff."

"Oh, okay. They also knew I was on the jet because I left my prints after Mystacor."

“We left a lot more than that .” Catra quipped. Adora began to laugh, and Catra massaged Adora’s shoulders, whilst taking off Adora’s jacket.

“Oh, and they know about us now.”

“Yeah, figures. The fed who came to the club noticed my nails immediately.”

“And I thought you were a cranky bitch.” Adora teased.

“Right? Like what is her problem?” Catra replied.

“One more question, how did you get Glimmer’s blood off of your floor?”

“I know a guy.”

“Did you really have to shoot her, though? I think she might’ve come around after an hour in the freezer.” Adora complained.

“Eh. I’m not gonna miss that homophobic stuck-up brat playing queen everywhere she went.” Catra muttered.

Chapter Summary

An Arrest is Made

"If they were keeping their marriage a secret, what else might they be keeping secret?" Mermista suggested.

"If you bring it up one more time I swear to the stars I will fly you back to headquarters tonight." Mara growled.

"I'm just sayin'." Mermista replied.

"Well, without bodies it's hard to pin it on anyone , whether it be Weaver and Grey, Dr. Brown, or this mythical boss of the Horde." Perfuma stated.

"Well, is there any way to find the bodies?" Mara asked.

"No. Theoretically, the bodies could be buried under Brightmoon somewhere, and we can't exactly dig up every square inch of the largest city in the world. They could also be at the floor of the ocean somewhere between here and Salineas, or they could be sitting on a beach somewhere. We still haven't even proved that they're dead. With the two missing chutes in the plane, it's still entirely possible, however unlikely, that they faked their deaths themselves and fled." Mermista complained.

“Why?” Perfuma asked.

“Why what?” Mermista responded.

“Why would they fake their deaths? What would they be running and hiding from?” Perfuma asked. The group thought silently for a moment.

“They could be on the Horde’s payroll.” Mermista suggested.

“They could’ve just been tired of their entire lives scrutinized by the public.” Mara added.

“Boring!” Mermista shouted.

“Neither of those options seem likely, given Director Spella’s testimony.” Perfuma interrupted.

“How well do you think her aunt really knew her? Or even her dad for that matter? President Moon, Director Spella, and Glimmer were all very busy people, and they very likely don’t know each other like a typical family would.” Mermista speculated.

“You wanna write the report to the Director?” Mara asked.

“Point taken.” Mermista grumbled.

“Well, out of our three suspects for the murder case, we don’t even know who one of them is, and the other two have relatively solid alibis. Dr. Brown was on camera in a restaurant across town, and although Glimmer was on camera at Weaver’s, Weaver never came out of the office, and Glimmer never went in.” Mara recounted.

“So, it wasn’t by their hands, but both of them have the money and the influence to pay someone else to do it!” Mermista exclaimed.

“Money trail! That’s it!” Perfuma blurted. She pulled out her laptop. After half an hour, she had both Dr. Netossa Brown and Catra Weaver’s bank accounts pulled up.

“So, that 100,000 dollar charge on Weaver’s account?” Mermista prodded.

“She bought a condo on the beachfront.” Perfuma replied.

“And the 50,000 dollar one in Brown’s?” Mara asked.

“To an unnamed account overseas…” Perfuma replied.

“You’re making a mistake! I didn’t do this!” Dr. Brown shouted, as she was shoved into a police car.

“You have the right to…” An officer started.

“I know my rights!” Brown retorted.

“We found a 50,000 dollar transaction in her checking account to an unnamed Salinean bank account.” Perfuma replied.

“We’ve never had that kind of money! We’re upper-middle class, that’s why ‘Tossa was so intent on fixing things in this city!” Spinnerella shouted.

“Maybe you don’t know enough about your wife.” Mermista replied.

“Or someone framed her. Maybe even your agency!” Spinnerella retorted.

Adora laid on her couch, Catra cuddled into her right side. The daily newscast had footage of Netossa being shoved into a cruiser, and a prediction that Huntara would undoubtedly be the next mayor of Brightmoon.

“Now how did you pull that off?” Adora whispered. Catra began to purr.

“You can thank ‘Trapta for that one. A bank’s internet security is nothing for that woman.” Catra chuckled.

“I love you, Catra.” Adora whispered.

“I love you too, Adora. And I’ll never let anything happen to us. Ever.” Catra replied.
