the love we promised each other

by burnedlilly

Summary

Adora is slightly tormented by the lack of actual torments, unsure of how her and Catra's relationship will be able to thrive after the storm. Luckily, true love comes to the rescue.

Notes

See the end of the work for notes

There was nothing that could have ever held Adora back from going after Catra. Maybe resentment or even common sense could try, but they could never, ever beat that little stupid thing that would lie in her heart so comfortably. Even if it hurt her more than anything, that feeling itself was enough to suppress any agony. It was, undoubtably, love. It had always been and Adora was sure it was keep on being nothing but love. Something that makes you so vulnerable, so exposed, so clearly weak, something that drives you to both madness and paradise. Something impossible to see and yet that reveals itself perfectly. Something that can't be diluted, wronged, changed. Something that is more infinite than infinite itself, something that could only be the beginning of everything that is known and unknown.

It is always said that "love" and "good" always win in the end. But what about the end itself? What happens when the sea calms down and you're at low tide? What happens when the skies stop crying, if everything drowned? What happens when the sun stops being oh-so aggressive, and you can go out again? What happens when there's no more war? What do you do with the remains? What do you do with the ruins? What do you do with all of the lull you feel, that makes you so uneasy? What do you do with the nights you can now sleep? What do you do with the lack of worries?

This and that would go over Adora's mind a mile per hour. Everything was fine now. But she couldn't help herself. Adora and Catra would never be children again. They would never be confined in the fright zone, they would never fight each other again, and they expected to not have to save the world twice. There was forgiveness, there was respect, there was love, all of it was there, so what was lacking? Adora couldn't help but ponder miserably as she watched the world around her slowly awaken once again.

They couldn't act like there wasn't history there. That they didn't have hard feelings about this and that. That they didn't wrong each other. It seemed, though, that something else was more important than those worries. Catra sat down alongside Adora, and asked her:

“You’re not happy, are you?”

“It’s… not that I’m unhappy. I just feel kinda… empty, I guess?”

“Well, you were carrying a huge weight and now you’re free. Maybe you’re just tired, Adora.”

“Maybe…” Adora looked at Catra with tears forming in her eyes. “... As much as I believed in myself… in us… I didn’t prepare myself for the day everything would be fine.”

“I… have my issues too. It’s hard to change. I’m still on my mission of apologizing to everyone, and sometimes I’m afraid they won’t accept it. Sometimes I’m afraid we’ll fight one day and we’ll bring back bad memories. Sometimes I’m afraid you’ll leave me again.” Catra seemed to be on the verge of tears as well. “But I don’t think I should listen to those voices. I want to hear you above anything else. I want to listen to you laugh with me, breathing while you sleep beside me, pant while you follow after me…” That only made Adora cry even more.

“I never thought I would hear something so sweet from you.”

“If you mention this to someone else I’m killing you.”

“Please don’t.” Adora laughed. “I’m the same, you know? I will do my best to listen to you. To trust ourselves each day.”

“I guess it’s never going to be like it was, but… maybe that’s for the better. I wouldn’t want to be that Catra again and… I’m starting to like She-Ra, too.”

“And what about me?” Adora joked.

“I’ve never stopped liking you, Adora… Ugh, this is getting too one-sided!”

“Sorry, sorry. I… I love you, Catra, and I loved who you were back then, and I loved you when we hated each other, and whenever you almost killed me, and every single time we were together or apart. I wouldn’t have done this without you and I wouldn’t have done this without loving you.”

“Go fuck yourself, Adora.” Catra avoided Adora’s eyes for a moment. “This romance thing is embarrassing.”

“But it’s fun, right?”

“I suppose so… We deserve each other, don’t we?”

“Yes we do.” Adora held Catra’s hand tightly. “I’ve always known that, even before I knew I loved you like this.”

“When did you figure it out?”

“I guess… I always knew there was something special, but I couldn’t put it into the correct words. I think I envied Netossa and Spinerella a little, thinking ‘if Catra and I were on the same side, maybe we could be like them…’, but then you were trying to kill me or something and I got distracted by that. But when I came to rescue you, I think I had finally given that feeling the name it had to have. And you?”

“I think I realized when you left. But I got angrier and angrier each time. I didn’t think you would love me back.” Adora looked into Catra’s eyes.

“Don’t you ever doubt it again, okay?”

“I won’t. You’ve made it clear.” Catra giggled, getting closer to Adora. They kissed, sweetly. “So… this… thing… we’re… hm… Adora. What are we now?”

“I guess… girlfriends, right?!” Adora couldn’t hide how happy she was saying that.

“Yeah… it sounds silly, though.”

“Suits us.”

“Sure.” Catra laughed semi-derisively.

“Do you… know how it works? ‘Cause, I mean, I’m not… I’m not an expert.”

“I think we figure it out? But, yeah, it’s exciting and scary.”

“A little, yeah.” Adora held Catra’s hand even tighter. “But we can… oh, we can do so many things together.” Catra reddened up a bit. “W-what’s on your mind?”

“Adora, you’re… kinda shameless.”

“I-I wasn’t talking like that! It’s more like, no one can defeat us! And we can have so much fun! B-but I assume we could do those things, too.”

“Do you know what those things are?”

“Ugh…” Adora thought for a moment. “I-I read about it once.”

“Please.”

“Do you know?”

“O-of course!” Adora knew that Catra was bluffing, obviously, but she couldn’t help but find it cute. Well, maybe she could say it out loud this time.

“You’re so cute, you know?”

“S-shut up, Adora…” So Adora kissed Catra again.

“I guess we will figure it out eventually.” Adora said it before going for another kiss.

End Notes

hi bitches its been so long since the last time i posted lol btw im addicted to catradora and spop again and i wrote the beginning of like another fic but i got tired so i wrote this one instead
