Sometimes Fate is Wrong

by HerPoisonedButterfly

Summary

"No," Adora choked out, taking a step back as Horde Prime's smiling face began to take form where Catra had been. "No, no, no!" Adora held her head in her hands as she stumbled back more. This couldn't be happening again. "You're not real!" Tears begin to prick at the blonde's eyes. "You...you're not…"

"Adora? Adora, are you okay?" The voice broke her from her panic, confusion now washing over her. The voice wasn't Catra's or Prime's. It was-

Adora looked up to meet amethyst eyes and a now concerned look. Glimmer was now standing where Catra once had been, her hand outreached in the same gesture.

"Glim?" Adora's voice was soft as she fixed her posture, her eyes not being able to look anywhere but the girl in front of her.
"Hey, 'Dora." The girl's smile grew a bit. "You okay?"

Notes

So this is a fic I actually wrote like three years ago during my obsession with She-ra and I stumbled upon it and a few others while deciding to write some fics about a certain pair of sword wielding sapphics. I decided I might as well share it with the world since I've been nose deep in fanficiton the past few days. I hope you guys like it!

Adora let out a soft groan as she fell into the bed behind her girlfriend, her body just ready to relax and get a good night's rest. Unfortunately, the world had other plans for her.

"Hi kitty," Adora spoke softly as she wrapped her arms around the shorter girl, letting out a hum of content.

"Hey Adora," the magicat responded quietly, not sounding too enthusiastic.

The blonde didn't notice though, nuzzling her face into the back of her girlfriend's neck. This earned a small sigh from the other girl, which then caught Adora's attention. She pulled her face back a little from the girl's neck, raising her head to look down at her. "Everything okay?"

"I'm fine," Catra replied, a low growl seeming to tag along with the answer.

"Really? 'Cause you don't sound fine," Adora insisted, leaning down closer to Catra's face, pecking her cheek.

Usually this would get a smile from the magicat, at least a couple weeks ago it would. "Adora, I'm not really in the mood to cuddle tonight." Catra stated matter of factly, the girl's shoulder pushing into Adora's in an attempt to push her away.

Adora's lips fell into a small frown, but she didn't want to upset the other, so she removed her arm from around the girl. This wasn't really a surprise to her. Catra hadn't been in a cuddly mood for almost two weeks. Had Adora done something wrong?

"Of course, no cuddling." She promised, laying her head back onto her pillow as she scooted herself away from her girlfriend just a little. "Maybe tomorrow night?" She tried, but only got a small grunt in response.

Adora's smile had faded now, but she didn't want to fight with the other. If she was comfortable not cuddling, then Adora was okay with that. So instead of wrapping her arms around the smaller girl, she just pulled them to her chest, curling up a little behind her girlfriend as she let her eyes fall shut.

Adora wasn't sure how much time had passed before she opened her eyes again, she just knew none of it had been spent sleeping, only feeling Catra shift around on the bed every few minutes. What caused her to open her eyes though was when the warmth beside her seemed to fade a little with one large movement. As her eyes adjusted to the darkness around her, she saw Catra sitting up now.

"Catra?" Adora spoke softly, obviously more tired now than she had been.

"I'm fine," Catra repeated. "I just think I need to go for a walk, get some air."

"Oh," Adora pushed herself up into a sitting position. "Want me to-"

"No," Catra cut her off, waving a hand to silence her. "I want to be alone right now. Get some rest, I will be back in a little bit." With that, Catra stood and made her way to the door, not bothering to grab anything on the way out.

"Not even a kiss?" Adora asked softly once Catra had left the room, a small sigh escaping her lips.

Adora spent the next half hour or so trying to go to sleep like Catra had asked, but it had been years since she slept alone. Wait, had she ever slept alone? The past five months since the war had ended, she had spent every night in bed with Catra. Before that, she had usually asked her friends to stay over in her room, or sometimes even found herself making her way to Glimmer's room.

Glimmer.

Maybe Glimmer was awake and Adora could go to her room, not to sleep, but just so she didn't have to be alone. Who was she kidding? Of course Glimmer was still awake. Glimmer always stayed up to ungodly hours of the night.

Almost without second thought, Adora pushed herself out of bed and made her way over to her bedroom door, opening the door slowly in hopes to not wake anyone else in their hall. She peeked out, somewhat hoping she would see Catra coming back from her walk, feeling better and ready to cuddle.

Nothing.

Adora let out a soft sigh before stepping out into the hallway, her bare feet pressing against the cold floor. She made her way down the hall, only having to go a few doors down, thankful Glimmer had never transferred herself to a different room after becoming queen.

The blonde paused as she lifted her fist to knock on the door. What if Glimmer actually was asleep? Adora would feel so bad if she woke her up, especially since that would mean the queen had actually gotten to bed at a decent time. Wait, was it a decent time? Adora wasn't even sure what time it was. What if it was-

Her thoughts were cut off as the bedroom door swung open slowly, lavender eyes staring up at Adora in the moonlit halls. "'Dora? You're still up?" The shorter girl questioned, not even a hint of drowsiness detectable in her voice. The queen was wearing a light blue tank top with some purple night pants, the pants having stars all over them.

"Uh, yeah," Adora cleared her throat. "Sorry if I'm bothering you I just-" she paused for a moment before narrowing her eyes at her friend for a moment. "How did you know I was out here?"

Glimmer's lips curled up into a small smirk. "You're not exactly the quietest person."

The queen admitted with a giggle. Adora's felt heat raise to her cheeks at that comment. She could have sworn she was being quiet. "Can I come in?" She tried changing the subject.

"Of course," Glimmer's smirk became a soft smile as she stepped back to allow the blonde to enter the room, which Adora did as quickly and quietly as she could possibly manage. "I'm surprised you're even still awake. It's late."

"I couldn't sleep." Adora admitted, taking a seat on the girl's bed that she had recently lowered to the floor after one too many accidents. "Catra is out walking."

"At two in the morning?" Glimmer asked, arching an eyebrow.

It was already two in the morning? How on Etheria was she still awake?

"Yeah, she said she wanted to be alone."

The queen furrowed her eyebrows at that, making her way over to sit on the bed next to Adora. "And you can't sleep because she isn't there, cause you're alone."

Adora could feel her face heating up again, turning her head so Glimmer couldn't catch on. "Something like that."

Glimmer was quiet for a moment. Adora wasn't sure if she was in thought or just trying not to make fun of Adora's weird sleeping habit. "Is everything okay?" Glimmer began, but before Adora could say anything, she spoke again. "Between you and Catra I mean. I've noticed she has been kind of distant and you've seemed kind of off too."

She had?

"Yeah, everything is fine," Adora lied, turning her head back to force a hopefully reassuring smile to her best friend. A best friend who looked like she didn't buy that for one second.

"Okay," Glimmer nodded, surprising Adora and causing her to release a breath she hadn't realized she had been holding. Maybe she should tell Glimmer, she could help. "Well, you know you are always welcome to sleep in here if you want."

Adora's smile became more genuine. "Thanks, Glim," she leaned back on the bed a bit, her eyes staying on the pinked haired girl. "But I'm sure Catra will be back soon and then I can go back."

Glimmer mirrored Adora's smile, but something seemed off about it. "Okay, well how about we cuddle a bit until she gets back? I'm sure she'll know to find you here."

"That would be great," Adora agreed, moving to lay back on the bed as Glimmer snuggled into her side, wrapping an arm around the taller girl. It was nice, Adora had always been able to find comfort cuddling with any of her friends, especially Glimmer. After a moment, she sighed. "Thanks Glim."

"Of course, 'Dora." The queen replied, her face nuzzled into the crook of Adora's neck. The blonde's own arms were wrapped around Glimmer as well, her head resting on the pillow above hers. The plan was to just lay like this, cuddling until Catra walked in and dragged Adora back to bed, but after only a few minutes of their snuggling, Adora found her eyelids growing heavy as she found it hard to stay awake.

Moments later, her breathing came to an even pattern as she drifted off in Glimmer's arms.

Adora's eyes opened and she was looking at her reflection in a waterfall, her long hair down with a golden headpiece around her forehead. There was a red jewel in the middle of it. It looked rather beautiful. She looked beautiful.

She turned as she heard the door behind her open, Glimmer and Catra coming in the room together. It looked like Catra was trying to get away from Glimmer, a brush in the shorter girl's hand.

“Catara! Just let me brush it!” The pink haired girl called as she chased the magicat into the room.

“No!” Catra squealed as she hid behind Adora. “Don’t let her touch me! She is going to torture me.” Glimmer only giggled as the two girls circled around Adora.

“Do you always have to be so dramatic?” Glimmer teased, her hands on her waist now.

Why did this seem so familiar? Why did she feel like this had happened before?

“Come on guys,” a familiar male voice said as Adora’s attention turned to her other friend. “If we are late to Scorpia’s first ball, she is going to kill us.” Bow teased as he wrapped an arm around Glimmer, the girl’s head laying on the boy’s shoulder.

“Fine,” Glimmer sighed, “You’re off the hook.” She promised, her eyes opening to look over at Catra who was still hiding behind Adora. Catra stuck her tongue out at Glimmer before a grin took her lips. “This time.” Glimmer finished, earning a small noise from the magicat.

Glimmer and Bow gave Adora one last look before heading out of the room. Catra began to follow them, but turned to look at Adora once more. “You coming?” She asked, holding her hand out. Adora stared at her hand for a moment.

Why did all of this seem like it had happened before? Whatever, maybe it was just deja vu.

Smiling, Adora reached a hand out to take Catra’s, but as she went to take it, her hand slipped through and everything began to glitch. That’s when it hit her.

“No,” Adora choked out, taking a step back as Horde Prime’s smiling face began to take form where Catra had been. “No, no, no!” Adora held her head in her hands as she stumbled back more. This couldn't be happening again. "You're not real!" Tears begin to prick at the blonde's eyes. "You...you're not…"

"Adora? Adora, are you okay?" The voice broke her from her panic, confusion now washing over her. The voice wasn't Catra's or Prime's. It was-

Adora looked up to meet amethyst eyes and a now concerned look. Glimmer was now standing where Catra once had been, her hand outreached in the same gesture.

"Glim?" Adora's voice was soft as she fixed her posture, her eyes not being able to look anywhere but the girl in front of her.

"Hey, 'Dora." The girl's smile grew a bit. "You okay?"

"I…" Adora paused. "Yeah, I'm fine." It wasn't necessarily a lie. Part of her couldn't remember why she had been crying in the first place. While the other part of her swore Catra had just been in the room, so why did it feel so right when she gently placed her hand in Glimmer's?

Suddenly the scene changed. They were in the Scorpion Kingdom's ballroom. One of Adora's hands was on Glimmer's waist, the other holding her free hand, Glimmer's hand on Adora's shoulder.

Glimmer was smiling up at Adora as they danced, their bodies close as the song played on. Adora wasn't quite sure what the song was, the words didn't seem audible. It wasn't like she was trying to listen anyways, her eyes were trapped in the gaze of the girl dancing with her.

Glimmer was beautiful, the lights form the ballroom dancing in her eyes to form more of a sparkle. It made Adora's heart skip a beat, or at least she is pretty sure that's what that feeling was.

"You look amazing," Glimmer said quietly, leaning over to rest her head on Adora's chest.

Adora wanted to compliment the girl back but instead she said, "Where is Bow?" It felt like a question that needed to be asked.

Glimmer didn't even seem bothered about Adora skipping around the compliment, her head raising to look off into another part of the room with a smile. "He is with Seahawk and Mermista. Don't they all look so happy?"

Adora followed her gaze to where she found the three in question. Seahawk and Bow seemed to be laughing over some joke one of them had just told and Mermista- Mermista had one of the most genuine and happiest smiles Adora had ever seen the girl produce. It made Adora smile as well.

Another question bubbled into her mind and almost as if Glimmer could read her mind, she spoke up. "Isn't it great how Catra is helping Scorpia greet the guests? I know Scorpia and Perfuma appreciate it."

Adora's attention went to the back of the room, where Scorpia, Perfuma and Catra were greeting guests, all with large smiles that reached their eyes. Then with another scene change, Adora was standing up from what she believed was a bow. Her eyes met the host's dark eyes as she straightened herself up.

"Princess Scorpia," she heard Glimmer say from beside her. "It is always a pleasure. This party is amazing."

"Aw, thank you, Glimmer!" Scorpia replied in her usual cheery voice. "It's all thanks to Catra and Perfuma. They both put in a lot of work to make this perfect."

Perfuma giggled in response from her position behind Scorpia, as Catra grinned over at the three of them, "Guilty as charged," the magicat said, giving Glimmer and Adora a wink from the chair she was lying across.

Adora felt her grip tighten on Glimmer's hand though she wasn't really sure why. "How is the rebuilding going?" Glimmer asked, leaning gently against Adora's side.

"Amazing," Scorpia was the one to answer, a large smile on her lips. "Catra is putting in so much work, we are almost done with all the repairs here."

"Then it is off to Salineas," the feline added. "They have gotten some of the work done, but I am heading there to help them finish up."

"That is amazing Catra!" Glimmer exclaimed, a large grin on the short girl's lips.

"Thanks Sparkles," Catra matched her grin before looking over both her and Adora. "Well, I think you two lovebirds have spent enough time chatting. Go enjoy the party before we kick you out for being losers." She teased.

Lovebirds? No, that wasn't-

"Okay, okay," Glimmer giggled. "We are leaving. Later, Scorpia, Perfuma," her gaze landed on Catra. "Horde Scum."

All of a sudden, Adora was in a lying position, her eyes focused on the millions of stars above her. They were all so beautiful. It was hard to believe there had been a point when she couldn't see them, when they didn't exist.

"They are so beautiful, aren't they?" A voice asked from beside her, though Adora knew exactly who it was.

"They are," Adora agreed, a smile gracing her lips. "Almost as beautiful as you." The words slipped out, but Adora didn't feel any embarrassment saying them. Why would she?

A giggle sounded from the girl beside her and then within a moment, those amethyst eyes were above her, staring down at her. "You are so cheesy." Glimmer said in a soft voice, her eyes sparkling brighter than the stars.

"Maybe," Adora's lips turned up into a grin now, her hand raising up to rest on Glimmer's waist. "But you love it."

Glimmer's eyes somehow seemed to sparkle more in that very moment and Adora swore they were the most beautiful thing she had ever seen. "I love you." Glimmer whispered before leaning down further, pressing her soft lips to Adora's.

Adora's eyes fluttered open, but she had to quickly shut them again as light practically blinded her. Was it morning already? Adora let out a soft groan as she shifted in the soft bed, stopping as she felt the warm body curled into her. Then her senses kicked in.

This bed was way too soft to be her own and last time she checked Catra's hair was not pink. Adora squeaked quietly as she lifted her head just enough to look down at the sleeping girl, trying not to wake her.

Adora's arms were still wrapped around the girl, their legs tangled together and Glimmer curled up in Adora's arms. A soft smile appeared on Adora's face as she saw the soft face of the sleeping girl. However, panic quickly replaced it as the dream from that night came racing back to her mind.

Glimmer dancing with Adora, her head resting against Adora's chest. Catra putting in the utmost effort to help rebuild the kingdom with Scoripa and Perfuma, Bow laughing with Mermista and Seahawk. Lying together under the stars with Glimmer, their fingers intertwined as they admired the stars and each other. Glimmer saying she loved her. Glimmer kissing her.

Adora raised a hand gently from around Glimmer to ghostly touch her own lips, the same lips that had been kissed in her dream. She feels heat rising to her cheeks as the kiss replays in her mind. Usually her dreams faded once she woke, but this one stayed so vividly. Every detail still etched into her brain.

It had all been wrong though. From the very beginning, a replay of the dream she had back at the heart. It was the future she had always dreamed of, the four of them being happy in their life. Adora being happy with Catra as her girlfriend. That is what was true. That is what her life was, what it was meant to be. Everything in her dream last night was wrong.

So why did it all feel so right?

End Notes

Now, now. I would like to make it clear, I am NOT a Catradora hater, but I do prefer Glimmer/Adora over them and they were my first ship I fell in love with. I do have a couple other She-ra fics I was working on that may or may not include all three of them that I will be starting to post soon.
