Together Forever (I couldn’t live without you)

by unicorn_sparkles2006

Summary

In the horde, all Catra and Adora had were each other.

Notes

hey! i’m actually writing a new fic (in the middle of the night while sleeping of course) this is basically a short drabble of Adora and Catra reflecting/talking as children. inspired by a real conversation i had with my childhood best friend when we were young, though we were just weird and definitely did not have to go through anything Adora and Catra did.
I hope you enjoy!

tw: references to suicide (mostly death-they’re kids) and child abuse

Adora hated weekly meetings with Shadow Weaver. Her's were always last, and went over with some sort of training or punishment.

She hated how she had to watch Catra limp out of her meeting, just before hers. She was pretty sure Shadow Weaver did it on purpose, putting the two meetings back to back. It was like she wanted Adora to see how she hurt Catra, but give her no opportunity to help her friend.

This week's meeting was no different. Adora watched Catra enter the barracks, smelling of burnt fur as she shook. Adora reached out to her, dragging her to sit on their shared bunk.

"I'm sorry," Adora said in a quick whisper, a slight lisp coming through her missing tooth. "I'll be back as soon as possible, ok?"

Catra never replied to her, always just looked away from Adora. But, Adora couldn't do anything, she had to get to her own meeting. Who knows what would happen to Catra then.

The meeting went by slower than usual as Adora's fingers tapped nervously on her chair. She sat across from Shadow Weaver, not really listening to what she was saying. The young girl heard a catch of "scores dropping," "distraction," and "force captain," but she couldn't focus. Her mind kept flashing back to Catra. She hadn't really seen how she was, how bad Shadow Weaver had hurt her. What if it was too bad for Adora to patch up? What if Adora took to long?

"Adora!" Her head shot up as she met Shadow Weaver's furious gaze. "You weren't paying attention, I suppose it has something to do with Catra?"

Adora shook her head quickly, "No, Shadow Weaver, I was thinking of today's training, how I messed up."

Shadow Weaver's eyes narrowed as she made a clicking noise with her tongue, "You know Adora, future force captains don't make mistakes like that.”

Catra had been sitting on Adora’s bed for forever. She sighed loudly, holding her tail which was bent at an awkward angle. Adora’s meeting had went over for an hour. It wasn’t unusual for her meeting’s to go over, but something felt odd in Catra’s gut.

After several moments later, a sweaty, shaking Adora entered the barracks. Her unfocused eyes looked wildly around the room for Catra, although the cat girl was still where she had left her.

Catra, knowing better than to startle Adora in these moments, whispered her name gently, “Adora?”

Adora’s eyes snapped to Catra immediately, and she rushed to her on her shaking legs. “Are you ok? What did she do to you?” Adora’s words were fast as she tripped over them, “I think we have some bandages left over from last time? Do you need them.”

Now that Adora was closer, Catra could make out Adora’s face better. Sweat rolled down her temples, and her ponytail had mostly fallen out, most concerning- her lip was split, dried blood crusting around it.

“Slow down, Adora,” She grabbed her best friends shaking hands.

Adora breathed in, but still did not seem to calm down, her eyes caught the sight of Catra’s crooked tail, a gasp leaving her mouth. “Your Tail!” Adora grabbed the bandages from underneath their bed and pulled on Catra’s tail, causing her to hiss. “I’m sorry, let me wrap your tail, it’ll feel better.”

Catra watched Adora as she wrapped her tail. Adora’s tongue stuck out as she focused, lightly rubbing on the forming scab on her lib.

After Adora finished, the two sat in silence, enjoying each others company. “I don’t know what I would do without you,” Adora finally whispered. “I don’t think I’d ever be able to handle it.”

“You’d never have to,” Catra grinned. “You’re stuck with me forever. We’ll probably like- die on the same day.”

“I hope so,” Adora sighed. “If anything ever happened to you, like if you got hit in a tank in battle- I’d jump off the roof of the Frightzone.”

”If you ever get super sick and don’t get better, I’ll get bad food poisoning from the expired ration bars.”

“When your a force captain, and you say something dumb and get your head chopped off, I’ll jump right in front of their knife too.”

“If Shadow Weaver ever gets to you,” Adora’s whispered voice shook. “I’ll make sure she does something to me too.”

“Do you think any of that would ever happen?”

“I don’t know,” Adora shrugged. “Maybe we’ll be together at the end of the world. We’ll go out together.”

”Together,” Catra’s mismatched eyes stared into Adora’s, “Whatever it is, we’ll face it together, and we’ll never be apart.”

“Promise?”

“I promise.”
