Workaholic Adora

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/33616801.

Rating:
Not Rated

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Category:
F/F

Fandom:
She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationship:
Adora/Catra (She-Ra)

Characters:
Adora (She-Ra), Catra (She-Ra)

Additional Tags:
Alternate Universe - Modern Setting

Language:
English

Stats:
Published: 2021-09-01 Words: 1,975 Chapters: 1/1

Workaholic Adora

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/33616801.

Rating:
Not Rated

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Category:
F/F

Fandom:
She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationship:
Adora/Catra (She-Ra)

Characters:
Adora (She-Ra), Catra (She-Ra)

Additional Tags:
Alternate Universe - Modern Setting

Language:
English

Stats:
Published: 2021-09-01 Words: 1,975 Chapters: 1/1

Workaholic Adora

by TackyEye

Summary

"Hey Adora." Catra said in the sultriest voice she could muster up.

A few years back, that voice was enough to make her wife red as a tomato and have her pants down in a few seconds. But now…
"I am sorry, Catra. I am already late for work." Adora said without even looking at her.

Notes

See the end of the work for notes

“Hey Adora.” Catra said in the sultriest voice she could muster up.

A few years back, that voice was enough to make her wife red as a tomato and have her pants down in a few seconds. But now…

“I am sorry, Catra. I am already late for work.” Adora said without even looking at her.

Catra pouted. “Your work doesn’t start until nine. It’s six! You have plenty of time.”

“I know, but Miss Weaver wants me to come a few hours early so that I can get some extra work in. We have a product release coming up, which is important.”

Miss Weaver was Adora’s boss. Catra hated her with all her might. Weaver would make Adora attend her office early, and make her stay until late in the night. As if that wasn’t enough, she would also overload her with tasks, forcing Adora to stay up late night and work from home, or on weekends. Catra had tried time and again to convince Adora to leave her job, but she wouldn’t hear it.

“The pay is really good, Catra. Also, it’s a very prestigious company which is good for my career.”

“It doesn’t matter if you literally work yourself to the grave! You are making yourself sick, Adora. You hardly rest nowadays!” Catra had argued back.

They had a huge fight over it. Their already fragile marriage had crumbled a bit more, along with Catra’s heart.

While Adora got dressed for work, Catra made her some breakfast. She tried to include as much energetic foods as possible, knowing Adora would probably skip lunch to squeeze in some extra hours of work.

She set up the table as Adora trudged downstairs. Despite having taken a shower, she had dark circles under her eyes. Catra looked at her worriedly.

"Are you alright? You look pale."

"I am fine, Catra." Adora replied dully. She started to wolf down her breakfast. Catra gently laid a palm on her forehead.

"No, you are not! Your body is warm. You have a fever!"

"I said I am fine, Catra!" Adora snapped back. She grabbed her briefcase and stood up.

"See you tonight, I love you." Adora started for the door, but swayed on her feet. Catra grabbed her.

"Adora please. You don't have to go today. Call in your office and tell them you are sick. You can afford to miss one day."

"I'll be fine, Catra." And she was off. Catra watched sadly from the window as Adora pulled their car down the driveway. She blew her a kiss as she drove by, and Catra winked back. Maybe her fever wasn't so bad after all…

She finished up a few tasks around the house, and went for a walk. Unlike Adora, she was an art major, therefore she could work from home, and at her leisure. Her income wasn't as much as Adora's, but it was enough for her.

She brought her art supplies with her so she could work outside. She sat down on a park bench, and began drawing a rough sketch of the surrounding scenery. She lost track of time as she worked, immersed in her drawing. Hours passed, and by lunch time, she finally decided to go home.

As she entered the house, she realized she hadn't taken her mobile with her. She checked it, and noticed a voice message from Glimmer, Adora's colleague. She frowned. What does Sparkles want with me?

She played the message.

"Catra, Adora fainted at work today. She looks seriously ill. Call me back."

Catra's heart stopped. With shaking fingers, she dialed Glimmer's contact and put the phone to her ear.

"What happened?" She asked the moment Glimmer picked up.

"We don't know. She was in the middle of a presentation when she suddenly collapsed. We laid her down. She is still unconscious." Glimmer said urgently.

"I'll be there in ten minutes. Stay put." Catra growled.

She quickly hailed a cab and hissed the address to the driver. It took twenty minutes to reach Adora's office. Catra's thoughts raced.

'What if something serious happened to her?'

'I should have stopped her this morning.'

She tried to clear her mind. She can't fall apart like this, not when Adora needs her. She rushed down the reception hall. Bow was waiting near the elevator. He smiled at her.

"It's alright. She woke up just a few minutes ago." Bow said gently.

Relief flooded her mind. Making a mental note to do something nice for him, she asked, "Where is she now?"

"She is back to giving her presentation. She insisted she was well enough to finish it."

Catra blinked. Trust Adora to have zero regard for her own health, even after something like this.

"I still want to see her." She growled. Adora was really going to get it this time.

Bow nodded. She followed him into a small auditorium. A familiar voice filled her ears.

Adora was standing on the stage, giving some kind of corporate speech. Her face was ghastly white, her eyes were bloodshot, and her voice was hoarse. She looked like she could barely stand, yet she struggled on.

"She has been overworking herself a lot. We got really worried, but she insisted she was fine." Bow said.

Catra's blood boiled. She strode up to the stage, and climbed up. Ignoring the audience murmuring about the sudden appearance, she yelled loudly, "Adora! Enough of this."

Adora took a moment to register. "C-Catra? What are you- "

Catra grabbed her hand and yanked her off the stage. She dragged her outside as everyone gawked at them.

“Are you out of your mind? You are sick! You are supposed to be resting, not conducting a seminar.”

Adora crossed her arms. “I am fine, Catra. What are you doing here?”

Catra couldn’t believe her ears. “What am I doing here? How about the fact that my wife fainted?”

Adora looked a bit guilty at that. “I am sorry. It was only for a few minutes. I didn’t mean to worry you.”

Catra forced out a laugh. “Worry is an understatement.”

Adora stepped away. “I am going to finish my speech now. See you later.”

Catra was having none of that. “You are coming home right now.” She grabbed her shoulder and pulled her down the hall.

“Catra wait-“ A wave of dizziness overtook Adora at the sudden movement, and she tripped over her own feet. Catra caught her just in time.

“Adora!” She quickly guided her to a bench and sat her down. “Adora, breathe. Just breathe.”

Adora took a few minutes to recover. She looked up with a sad expression. “You were right, Catra. I should have just stayed at home today. I screwed up everything in front of everyone.” She sighed in resignation.

“Hey, it’s alright. You didn’t screw up anything. Let’s just go home for now. You can worry about this later.” Catra forced her voice to be gentle, even though she was super angry at her wife.

Adora nodded slightly, and stood up on unsteady feet. She clutched Catra’s arm and let herself be guided down the hall to the elevator.

As they reached the parking lot, a cold voice interrupted them.

“Adora, stop.”

Adora stiffened immediately, but obeyed.

Ms. Weaver strode up to them.

“Where do you think you are going? You have yet to finish your conference.”

Adora’s voice trembled. “Ms. Weaver, I am not feeling well today. Perhaps we can rearrange?”

Weaver didn’t seem very pleased. “Ms. Grayskull, your unprofessionalism has damaged the reputation of our company in front of our largest clients. I am hereby removing you from the project. You will receive no credits, and your bonus is cancelled.”

“But I worked so hard on this! Ms. Weaver, please. Just give me another chance!” Adora begged.

Ms. Weaver reached out a hand and caressed Adora’s cheek. “I had such high expectations for you, Adora. You have disappointed me. I do not think I can forgive that.”

Catra couldn’t take it anymore. She shoved Weaver off Adora and stood in front of her menacingly.

“Leave her alone! Can’t you see she is sick?”

Ms. Weaver narrowed her eyes at her. “You must be Adora’s wife. The one who keeps pestering and distracting her from her career. You are dragging her down from her true potential. I pity her being stuck with you,” and with that, Weaver strode off. Catra watched her go, too stunned to think of a god comeback.

Adora tugged at her sleeve, and pulled her towards their car. The drive home was silent. Adora had fallen asleep, weeks of exhaustion finally catching up to her. Catra pondered over waking her, but thought better of it. Sliding her hands underneath, she picked Adora up and carried her to the bedroom. She gently put her down, and checked her temperature. It was worse than before.

She wet a napkin with cold water and dabbed her forehead with it. Adora woke up at the contact.

"Catra?" she whispered.

"Sshh, it's alright. Go to sleep, you'll feel better in the morning." Adora's eyelids close, and soon, she was snoring.

(Catra stayed up all night.)

Adora awoke to see Catra still beside her, staring off into space. She reached out and held her hand. Catra peered down at her.

"How do you feel?"

Adora smiled. "Much better." She felt like she was alive again after months of working like a zombie.

"Good." Something about Catra's expression was off. She looked hurt, and angry. Adora sat up in concern.

"Catra, what is it?" She asked. Catra looked away.

"Sweetheart, talk to me." Adora tried again. Catra looked back at her and Adora was startled to see tears.

"Is that what you say about me at the office?" Catra snarled angrily. "A distraction who is dragging you down?" Adora was confused.

“What do you- “. Then she remembered their encounter with Ms. Weaver.

“Catra no! I didn’t say anything of the sort to her. It’s just,” Adora bit her lip, “She is like that most of the time.”

Catra didn’t look convinced. Adora cupped her cheek.

“Catra, I love you more than anything else in the world. I appreciate you looking out for me, even though it’s difficult. I am sorry, I truly am.” She kissed her deeply. She broke apart to see tears in Catra’s eyes.

“I love you too, Adora, but it’s so hard. We hardly spend time together. It’s like you are my roommate, instead of my wife.”

Adora knew this conversation was coming, but it didn’t make it any easier.

“I wish I could spend more time with you, Catra, I really do, but my work has made it impossible for me. You saw how Shadow Weaver was like.”

“Then quit! Find another job. It doesn’t have to be like this always Adora.” Catra pleaded with her. Adora sighed.

“It’s not so simple Catra. This job pays the bills. It might take me months to find another one.”

“I can handle our costs until then, Adora. We can cut down on our spendings.” Catra replied.

“I-I don’t know, Catra.” Adora looked away. She had always wanted to give Catra a good life, especially after her abusive childhood, but she screwed up everything. Now, her marriage was falling apart due to neglect. She was so tired. She wished she could go back to being a kid, when she could play with Catra all day, without a care in the world.”

Catra hissed impatiently, and started to get up, but Adora grabbed her hand. She had to fix this. She had to make this right.

"I'll do it." She whispered.

Catra didn't say anything at first, and Adora feared that she was lost to her forever, but then she felt a gentle squeeze on her hand, and she knew things were going to be okay.

End Notes

Sometimes, showing that you care can go a long way :)

Please drop by the Archive and comment to let the creator know if you enjoyed their work!