Artifact

by NeurodivergentCatra

Summary

A short little fic based on what might happen if the disk could infect everyone, instead of just Adora. This may or may not be canon to my All's Fair in Love and War series but I haven't decided yet.

The Northern Reach was much colder than Catra would like. She also was stuck with the two most annoying people in her life, to make matters worse. She rummaged through the supply boxes looking for a blanket. Just her luck, her movements caused the boxes to topple. A small red three pointed object clanged onto the floor. She reached for it, but Entrapta got to it first. "DON'T TOUCH THAT!" Entrapta shrieked. "It's a rare First Ones artifact that has very strange properties! I've been meaning to study it, but haven't had a chance. Last time it gave all my robots some murder-virus."

"You brought along a murder-virus and no blanket?" Catra groaned.

"It does other things. It made She-Ra lose it, and Adora went all floppy."

"So, a She-Ra off switch? Gimme!" Catra exclaimed. She grabbed it, with an ungloved paw, much to the shock of Entrapta. It started glowing immediately. Catra ran away on all fours, using her teeth to hold it. Entrapta radioed Scorpia for help and they gave chase. They found Catra hiding under a desk in the control room. The glowing artifact was behind her. When Entrapta reached for it, Catra started hissing at her.

"Are you okay, Catra?" Scorpia asked. Catra just flicked her tail and hissed again.

Entrapta again reached for the artifact, and Catra's claws unsheathed and she raised her arm as if to threaten Entrapta losing hers. Entrapta grabbed her recorder. "Northern Reach log 3, the artifact must have some effect on Catra, too. I would touch it to see what effect it had on me, but then I wouldn't be able to record such data."

"Is she gonna be okay?" Scorpia asked.

"Yes. Probably. Maybe. I needed the Rebellion's help to disable it last time." Entrapta replied. Then, a proximity warning alarm went off, scaring Catra. Catra flew from under the desk back into the storage area.

"Well, lucky us. She-Ra and the rest of the Rebellion are here." Scorpia sighed, looking at the monitors.

"Let's go find Catra, then we can explain the situation." Entrapta theorized. They walked into the storage area. Catra was nowhere to be seen.

"Here kitty kitty!" Scorpia called. They heard a meow from up above. "She's up in the rafters? How'd she get up there?" Entrapta simply shrugged. Then, She-Ra, Glimmer, Bow, and Sea Hawk walked in.

"How'd you guys get in?" Scorpia asked.

“The door was unlocked.” Bow replied. “What are you guys doing here?”

“Well, we were drilling for more First Ones tech, but now we have a different issue at hand.” Entrapta replied. “Catra found the red murder-virus artifact that messed with She-Ra last time and she went nuts. Bow, did you happen to bring another sonic arrow?”

“No, but I can probably make one with some supplies.” he replied.

“Where is Catra?” She-Ra asked. As if to answer her question, Catra dropped from the ceiling onto She-Ra, grazing She-Ra with the artifact before scampering off. She-Ra got back to her feet, and her eyes turned blood red.

“Adora?” Glimmer asked. The sword came crashing down and Glimmer had to teleport out of the way. “RUN!” Glimmer yelled. The remaining crew shuffled into the next room and Entrapta locked the door behind them. “I thought we destroyed that thing last time!” Glimmer whined.

“I repaired it in the name of science!” Entrapta exclaimed, earning her glares.

“For those of us who are inexperienced with this thing, what exactly is going to happen?” Sea Hawk asked. The sword plunged through the door.

“She’s gonna try to kill us until we get that sword away from her.” Glimmer replied. Scorpia stood in front of the door.

“I can wrestle it away, my claws should be strong enough.” Scorpia replied. She-Ra busted through the door, and Scorpia did as she said she would. She clamped her claws around the sword and stung She-Ra with her tail. She-Ra collapsed, releasing the sword, and turned back to Adora. Scorpia set the sword on the desk. “Now what?”

“Now we find Catra and destroy that artifact for good.” Bow ordered.

“But my study isn’t complete!”

“Entrapta, this thing is bad news. If it is also affecting Catra, it could infect all of us.”

“Speaking of which, what did you mean earlier when you said she went nuts?” Glimmer asked.

“She’s refusing to let anyone get close, running around on all fours, and hissing instead of speaking. So, acting more like a nonmagicat feline.” Entrapta replied. Then, boxes fell in the next room. The gang looked down, and Adora was missing.

“And now Adora’s loopy again. Great.” Glimmer groaned. The five non-infected Etherians walked out and found Adora squeezing Catra into a hug.

“Catra!!! I’m so happy to see you!” Adora squealed. She sat down against a box and began petting Catra’s mane. Catra simply cuddled closer and began purring loud enough that the group could hear it. Glimmer’s jaw dropped. Scorpia’s face dropped into a frown.

“Where is the artifact?” Bow asked aloud.

“It has to be here somewhere. Who wants babysitting duty?” Glimmer groaned.

“I would like to collect further data on how they are reacting to the virus.” Entrapta said aloud, pulling out her recorder. The rest of the group shrugged and split up.

Adora kept petting Catra for a minute, and then fell asleep. Entrapta got closer to check, and a loud growl emitted from Catra. “Addition to the log, Catra is very protective of Adora. Perhaps their childhood bond perseveres through their incapacitation.” Then, a sparkle of red caught Entrapta’s eye. “I found it!” she called. They all walked back over, and Entrapta pointed towards Catra's mane.

Scorpia reached for it and her claw was batted away by Catra, who also hissed at her and climbed to the top of the stack of boxes. This woke Adora up. "Hey guys, why are there two of everyone?" she slurred.

Then, Glimmer had an idea. She teleported up and grabbed the Artifact, but then kept teleporting. "HELP!" She screeched as she uncontrollably teleported around the room, into the snow and back.

"Log 3 addition, artifact seems to cause Glimmer's teleportation abilities to go haywire." Entrapta said into her recorder.

"Glimmer! Think still thoughts!" Bow turned to Sea Hawk. "Whatever you do, don't touch that thing." Bow ordered. Then, Glimmer crashed into Sea Hawk with a teleport, knocking him to the ground. "Nevermind, I guess." Bow groaned. "I need materials for a sonic arrow. Where's your temporary lab?" She pointed in the direction of the next room. "Scorpia, you think you can handle making sure nobody gets hurt?"

"I mean, I can sure try." she said as she watched Bow and Entrapta walk away while talking in words Scorpia had never heard and could not understand. Adora stood up and then stumbled as if she were going to fall to the ground so Scorpia ran over and caught her. Catra meowed from somewhere in the rafters, and Sea Hawk quietly mumbled something Scorpia could not put together. She did, however, notice a lack of the sparkly sound that Glimmer made when teleporting. A huge roar rumbled in the distance. The ground began shaking a little. “Earthquake!” Adora squealed. It must’ve dislodged Catra too, because she was now hanging from a rafter, all four sets of claws digging into it to keep her there. Sea Hawk said something about seeing a star, but it was hard to make out much more than that. His mumbles were so quiet that the only person who would be able to pick it up clearly would be Catra.

Glimmer finally reappeared. “I…” she got out before teleporting away again. A couple seconds went by before she reappeared again and yelled “MISTAKE!” The ground started shaking even more and another roar sounded, and much louder than the first. Bow and Entrapta ran back into the room.

“What the hell is going on?” Bow asked.

“The princess said something about a mistake, I think.” Scorpia replied. Then, a giant monster broke through the ceiling with red, veiny eyes like the ones She-Ra had.

“As if today couldn’t get any worse.” Bow muttered. The bug-like monster crawled in and Catra began frantically running around.

Adora spotted the sword in the next room and tried to walk towards it. “Shiny!” she said. Bow purposefully tripped her.

“The last thing we need is rampaging She-Ra again.” he stated, as he lifted Adora off the ground and put her arm around his shoulder. She was already snoring again, somehow. “We need to destroy the artifact now !”

Catra ran by, and Scorpia caught her. She struggled as she tried to wiggle out of Scorpia’s grasp, but to no avail. Entrapta felt around the mane. “Uh, bad news. She doesn’t have it anymore.”

“Glimmer must have it, then.” Bow groaned. The monster lunged at them and they all ran behind some boxes. “We have to survive and also come up with a plan to help Glimmer stop teleporting.”

“When I asked her how her mechanism worked, she said something about imagining and you told her to ‘think still thoughts’ so does that mean she’ll stop teleporting if we put her to sleep?”

“I think so.” Bow guessed. The monster crashed through the boxes they were hiding behind, and they all scattered to opposite sides of the room.

“Scorpia, use your tail to tranquilize her, and then use your pincer to destroy the artifact!” Entrapta yelled.

Scorpia readied herself. Glimmer briefly teleported within range, and Scorpia struck her in the leg with her tail. Glimmer fell to the ground immediately, and the artifact fell from her hand. This caught the beast's attention, and it ran in her direction. Scorpia quickly grabbed it and crushed it in her pincer. The beast's eyes stopped glowing red, and it retreated. The group looked around and realized that the base was almost completely destroyed.

"Ouch, my head." Sea Hawk groaned. Adora slowly came to as well. Catra appeared from underneath some boxes as well. She coughed up a hairball.

"What the hell happened?" she asked. Then she noticed Adora, Bow, and Entrapta on the other side of the room, as well as a knocked out Glimmer, Sea Hawk laying on the floor, and Scorpia holding the broken pieces of the Artifact.

"You do not want to know." Scorpia stated.
