Summary

Glimmer is keeping the assassins that were sent to kill her, they're hers now. The royal chefs are making them breakfast, they are a family by choice although some might have blood family to go back to it's kinda nebulous and likely not so because Horde Prime killed them but I swear this is a happy and funny fic. I swear!

Notes

Based on

The Royal Family

"Hey mom, hey dad! Sorry I'm late!" Glimmer breathlessly rushed out as she popped into existence in her chair for dinner a full thirty minutes late. Which honestly wouldn't have been all that suspicious if she'd just gone on to complain about her half day at court. But no. She didn't even give them a chance to say anything before serving herself off the platters he'd enchanted at the start. Micah tried to not appear too excited, when this had started happening they'd agreed to grill her before he was allowed to wiggle in his seat with glee. Not that he'd been good at it yet, but today was the day, he could feel it!

And so, he shared a quick look with his wife while doing his damndest to not break down in a fit of giggles. Which only made Angie narrow her eyes at him in suspicion before deciding that he probably didn't know much of anything. He tapped his toes inside his boot to bleed a little energy without looking like he was fidgeting and did his best to look kingly. It was the only way he would survive this meal.

"Of course, baby girl. How was your day?" Micah managed to ask without a single chuckle thank you very much. See? He was doing just fine and even started the questions!

"Yes," Angella said much more suspiciously, she had been at the whole cool and collected royal thing longer than he had after all, "how was your day?"

Glimmer, cheeks bulging with the food she'd already shoved into her face, flushed a little. She rapidly chewed before apparently giving up and started to answer, "Ih wa furdy-"

"Chew first please," Angella sighed as she put her fork down with a click. But he could see the way she was biting the inside of her cheek.

"It was good." Was what Glimmer finally said once she'd managed to choke down her food. To her credit, in any other situation with anyone else, that probably would've worked.

Micah glanced over and caught Angella's eyes again, and this time he did break down into quiet little wheezing snickers. It was unfair of him to leave her playing the role of stern parent, but it was also her own fault for using that look on him when she knew he was fighting a losing battle. This was like the trade route planning with the Boughbees all over again, except this time he at least wouldn't make a fool of himself in front of the court.

Angella put on her most aggrieved tone, sighing dramatically for effect. "Glimma…"

"What!? It was a good day! Nothing weird happened at all." Glimmer smiled brightly. Too brightly and then flicked her eyes between them quickly. You know, the way someone who wasn't trying to judge how well their obvious and terrible lie would land. Clearly she'd been spending too much time with Adora recently, usually she could play her cards much closer to the vest.

Angie lifted one eyebrow and she hummed, "Mm-hmm."

Micah finally managed to pull himself together and decided to put them all out of their misery, or, well, really it was fun but also a little bit of misery he supposed. "So, what's their name?"

Glimmer had the decency to blush and not much else. "Maybe I just enjoyed myself without a single attempt on my life, ever considered that? Why do you always assume it's someone new when I have a good day?"

Angella tried to glare over her steepled fingers as she quoted, "A smoothie."

"MOM! That was yeaaaaars ago, c'mon!" Then when she realized her parents were not going to let it go, Glimmer slumped in her seat. Ever gracious in her defeats. "Okay, so you have to promise you won't be mad."

"Sweetie, you've been doing this for how many years?" Angella asked, finally allowing a trace of her own amusement to shine through. "I don't think we can get upset about it anymore."

Glimmer chuckled nervously all the same.

Which really did not bode well.

Not that they'd get upset, oh no. They were the ones who had accidentally set the precedent when they befriended Glimmer's aunts before learning they were actually sent to assassinate them both. So, really, this was their own fault, but in their defense it had only been the TWO of them. And Glimmer was now on, what, eight? Nine if you even counted Bow's adorable attempt, which half the time Micah didn't. So, really, he was less worried about being mad or shocked, and much more delighted that Glimmer thought she'd somehow trick them with this old song and dance.

He was already mentally planning where to seat the newcomer for their daily breakfast together when Glimmer finally sheepishly answered, "Uhm, Hordak and Wrong Hordak?"

Now, okay, to be fair, Micah had not expected that! There was a fierce curl of pride that his daughter kept managing to yank Horde leadership right out from under their noses. But that only lasted until Angie squawked with her eyes popping out of her head, "WHO AND WHOM?"

Because that was, frankly, hilarious!

"Yup, Hordak and Wrong Hordak, and you know what? I bet they're hungry, long trip you know? So, uh, I'm going to fix that!"

"Glimmer don't you dare-" Angella didn't get to finish her empty threat as her daughter teleported out of the dining room, plate loaded with a mountain of food. Only to pop back in for a second to grab a pitcher of water with an overly wide smile and disappear in another shower of sparkles.

Micah managed to only snort once until he saw Angella's face again. And then he couldn't help but double over with laughter, only getting louder and worse when Angella shoved his face into his mashed potatoes. Which, apparently, was enough to set her off into her own fit of laughter.

"She gets this from you!" Angella shrieked through her own laughter. "Micah! S-stop!"

But he couldn't and he wouldn't, which is exactly why when Adora found them a few minutes later, she gave them only the shortest glance before she nodded solemnly and left without a word. And that was actually enough to keep them both howling with laughter until their ribs hurt.

Alright then.

Two new seats at the table! He'd worry about commissioning a larger table and maybe finding a larger room for the family breakfasts later. For now he simply attempted to wipe potatoes off his face and out of his beard, and tried to get his giggling under control.

Archer with a Heart of Gold

Chapter Summary

> Bow is trying to be an assassin but it's kinda hard with all the heart eyes he develops

Bow cautiously tiptoed around the guards as quickly as he could and made sure his modified slingshot was well hidden. If he was caught and appeared unarmed, he could just lean on the I'm a lost little orphan act. But, considering that he'd been sent on an impossible task as a punishment, well, he'd rather not risk cutting it any shorter than it had to be. He checked his homemade tracker pad again before swinging around the next corner and ducking under the shade of the nearest tree.

The old maps made back when the Horde thought they could take out Micah or Angella wouldn't work inside the castle, but the exterior didn't change that much. Which meant the tree he'd picked out was still right where his pad led him. Bow couldn't help but give a quick little dance in place before scampering up to some high branches. Get a high vantage point and stay away. It was good advice when he had his bow and arrows with him, but it should work just as well with the sling shot.

Of course even thinking about his beloved archery gear made the slingshot feel like a child's toy, but the poison gas pellets would do their job as long as he got them near the target's face. But it wasn't the same. Hmmm, maybe he could make his bow fold up? Then he could take it to so many more places! His mental schematics were quickly thrown aside when his target stormed into the area, and it took all his considerable willpower to not squeal in excitement.

Bow needed to focus. He was focused and serious and about to become a full blown assassin at twelve years old, and THIS WAS THE COOLEST THING TO EVER HAPPEN TO HIM! All he had to do was take out one child.

Princess Glimmer, just one year older than him and a few inches taller, was known for her teleportation powers and willingness to fight back. And Prime had decreed that since they couldn't take the king and queen out, they'd take the princess out instead.

Easy peasey!

He was ready!

He was super ready!

He was definitely ready and not stalling!

Yup, he was the mayor of Readysville riding the Preparedness Train into town! Ha ha...choo choo... Bow squeezed his eyes shut with a silent groan, who was he kidding? He was terrified and totally not prepared, and there was no way this would work.

He didn't even want to be an assassin! He'd switched career tracks just to stay with Adora, who was, like, the only nice person in the whole Horde. He tried to refocus only to find the target had moved.

Princess Glimmer had apparently calmed down already from whatever had upset her, and was now tossing balls of sparkling light at the castle wall which was just the coolest! Bow glanced at his gear and put it away to clamber carefully closer on his branch. It couldn't hurt to bring back intel right? He was good at that!

Wait...no, it wouldn't matter since she'd be gone would it? Because he had to kill her, because if he didn't he'd-

Bow spent a second too long pondering it and fell from the branch with a scream when light blasted him in the face. Oops.

"WHO ARE YOU!?" Princess Glimmer demanded, one fist raised and loaded with sparkles again.

"U-uhm, noooooo one?" Bow tried, blinking his watering eyes clear as he could. Wow! He never wanted to get hit with that again, but man it was so cool!

The Princess glared down at him, before she stomped a foot. "Don't lie to me Horde scum!"

"H-horde? I'm not-" Bow's voice cracked and he quickly deepened it to be more authoritative, "I am not from the Horde your majesty! I'm uhm," he realized his mistake too late and tried to correct anyways into a higher younger sounding range, "an orphan???"

Princess Glimmer looked him over slowly, quickly glancing up only long enough to determine no one else was there before she grabbed his shirt and teleported them. Bow's stomach flipped for a second and suddenly he was standing inside the castle. The room she'd taken him to was too bright and airy to be safe, with large open windows and some sort of hanging gold platform in the middle. There were also a lot of really cute stuffed toys.

"Awww," Bow cooed at a little owl-like creature.

"You can get gooey eyed later," The Princess darted to the door to make sure there was no one there before closing it again, "How did you get into the castle?"

"Uhhhhh, I, uhm," Bow could not remember for the life of him what his lie was supposed to be so his brain shifted to just tell the truth, "I scaled the cliff out back."

Princess Glimmer rolled her eyes and growled before waving her hands, "Yeah, okay, don't care about that part. How did you get on the castle grounds?"

"W-wellllll…" Bow scratched at the back of his head, after all, what else could she be talking about? Apparently too impatient for him to put the pieces together, Glimmer cut him off.

"Please you HAVE to tell me how you got past the magic shield! I'm so BORED and I can't leave ever since dad put it up." Glimmer literally put her hands together as she begged him. "Please!"

Oh, duh, of course! Man, his nerves were really making this harder than it should be.

"Oh, that was simple! I used my patented new tracker pad!" Bow whipped it out of its holster with a dramatic flourish. "It's my own design. See, I was reading this article about how technology with First Ones tech can pass as magic so I blasted a frequency out of this bad boy that matched the shield. Pretty neat, huh?"

"Whoa!" Glimmer snatched the device out of his hands to look at it like it held the answer to all her problems. "And you made it? That's super cool!"

He didn't even think about it before he ended up on the other side of nearly an hour happily ranting and rambling about his tech projects (which Glimmer actually seemed interested in even as she played with the tracker pad), and even then he was only broken out of it when the door opened.

"Hey sweetheart, Professor Sage said you didn't make it to class so I…" King Micah stood in the doorway and stared at Bow with wide eyes. "...uh…"

"Sorry dad!" Glimmer chirped before bouncing over to show him Bow's pad. "I met Bow and check this out, he built this himself!"

The King slowly looked him over, and Bow could tell he knew who he was. But then he winked and instead of hauling him to a prison said, "Wow, that's great! You must be really good with technology."

"Uhm, yes?" Bow winced at how uncertain he sounded.

"That's fantastic kiddo! Tell ya what, I bet I could get you an internship here at the castle with our Techmaster. How's that sound?" King Micah wiggled his eyebrows with his hands on his hips, looking completely silly.

Bow didn't care how the king looked, all he could see AND hear was the hearts floating around his head as he whimpered with excitement. “Really!? You mean it!?”

“Really, I mean it!”

“Yes!” Glimmer cheered before wheeling on him again. “Please say yes! Bow, we could hang out all the time!”

Bow bounced on the balls of his feet and didn’t even think as he accepted the offer, “That would be so cool! I’d love to intern here!”

Glimmer poofed from her dad’s side just to grab him in a hug, “We’re gonna be best friends, I can tell.”

Without even considering an alternative, Bow cheered, “Best Friend Squad!”

“Now that’s the spirit!” Micah laughed and handed the pad back to him. “How about we get you settled in while Glimmer goes and does her lessons?”

“What!? Daaaaad!” But no amount of pouting worked and off she went.

Bow didn’t even realize until much later that Micah never asked about guardians or parents or where he came from. And a scant three days later when he tearily confessed why he’d really been at the castle to the royal family at breakfast, he was met with three firm, warm hugs and the assurance that they knew. Right after Glimmer triumphantly shouted, “I knew it!” and just before Queen Angella scolded her daughter about befriending an assassin.

The other two women in the room, he’d been introduced and just couldn’t remember their names, had broken into laughter, “Hypocritical much Angella?”

It would be years later while he was in the library talking with his adoptive dads that he’d find out that they had also been assassins sent to kill the leaders of Brightmoon. Bow spent plenty of time with Spinerella and Netossa in between his lessons and time with his adoptive dads and siblings, and before he knew it he was eating breakfast with them every day.

And he could not be more grateful that he'd been sent away!

The Golden Girl

Chapter Summary

> Adora is out for revenge! (And also because Shadow Weaver told her too)

Adora is a girl on a mission.

Literally.

Mission Objective: Assassinate Princess Glimmer of Brightmoon

Mission Parameters: Any method allowed, stealth preferred for successful extraction. If caught, you will not be rescued and will ensure no sensitive information makes it into enemy hands.

Secondary Objective: Retrieve Novice Bow for extraction or cause mass destruction if he is gone.

Okay, so that second objective wasn't technically part of her mission and wasn't in the briefing, but Adora would be damned if she let the Princess's keep their grubby hands on him! Bow was her friend, even though the Horde doesn't allow you to have friends and she had accepted this mission in his memory. Not that she had a choice, Shadow Weaver said she was ready so she was ready and going onto the field years ahead of schedule. But the fact of the matter was that Adora would have volunteered if she'd been able to so it was basically the same thing.

"You're just throwing your life away for- for, what? Revenge? Adora, you know this is a bad idea when I'm the one saying you shouldn't take revenge!" Catra hissed, as close as she ever got to begging.

Adora swallowed thickly as she made her way to the cliff side of Brightmoon. Catra was her oldest and best friend, but Bow was a best friend too. He deserved someone to do this for him, because if there was one thing Adora was certain of it was that Bow was still alive. The rebels had started to use tech that she'd recognized instantly as his, so they were keeping him alive to use him against them. She understood Catra's fear, but she had to do this. She had to! And she was ready, Shadow Weaver said so!

It took a few seconds to fire her grappling hook, the one Bow had made so she could follow Catra around the Fright Zone years ago, and she hooked up her ascender to start the climb. She would scale the supposedly non-scaleable cliff, sneak in, find Bow, bust him out of the dungeon, and they'd take out the princess together before going home. Simple!

An hour later with shaking arms Adora barely managed to pull herself over the lip of the cliff and laid on the ground huffing for air. S-simple!

An hour after that she woke up to see the night moons had moved significantly while she'd napped, and also that her body was betraying her by hurting so much. "Well you didn't want to do the cool down stupid!" Ugh, Catra. She was so mean sometimes but usually she was also really right. Adora winced and not from her pathetic stretching efforts.

Okay, well, so far this hadn't really worked out but she'd planned in plenty of extra time knowing that her plan might not make it after contact with the enemy. And cliff faces were now her sworn enemy, so she'd just adjust a bit. It was fine!

Sneak in, find Bow, dramatic prison break, assassination, go home. Adora began shakily pulling herself through a giant unlocked and highly unsafe window to creep along inside the castle. Part two of the mission: success.

Catra's arm tightened around her throat even as she chuckled. "This is too easy! You never check behind you." Adora whirled around just in case her friend had ended up following her but there was nothing. Now she was starting to regret not letting Catra sneak out to help, she was sneakier and better with directions, and as much as it pained her to admit it, also less jumpy in new environments. But it had been for the best that Adora refused her. Because now she'd do the mission the way she was supposed to and get promoted and save Bow and keep Catra safe and Shadow Weaver would finally be proud of them and everyone would stop teasing them and Catra would have to take it all back and- and- and-

"AAAAAHHHHHHHHHHHHHH!!!!!!!!!!!" Was all the warning she got before someone fell on her shoulders, sending them both crashing painfully to the marbled floor.

It didn't take too much effort to shove her attacker off of her, and muscle memory had her bolo flying before Adora even clocked who she was fighting. Unfortunately for her Princess Glimmer squeaked and vanished in a shower of sparks before popping into existence behind her, and forced a grapple once again.

Honestly? It was a little humiliating to realize that if they were trading blows, Adora would've won easily, but this close quarters she was being absolutely demolished.

"What?" Catra purred, "I'm just helping you with your CQC!"

Well, scrap. She probably should've tried harder when she'd gotten pounced to learn how to fight back. Adora made a mental note to double down on it when she got back, but for now she just had to lean into the attack!

It couldn't have been more than a minute before someone else rounded the corner. "I'm sure lessons weren't that bad Glim-ADORA!?"

Adora's head snapped up instantly, and there was Bow. He was much taller now and more filled out muscle wise. He wore a painfully bright white shirt with a heart on the chest, and she was aghast to realize he had a bit of shoulder and hand armor but the shirt was cropped. They probably would've stared at one another for hours if Glimmer hadn't used her distraction to punch her in the face.

“WAIT! STOP!” Bow hurled himself between them. “I can’t have my friends beating each other up? What kind of friend would that make me?”

“She’s your friend!?” They both shrieked and glared at one another.

Adora shoved the princess away from her, one hand still cradling her aching cheek. “I’m here to rescue you!”

Bow’s eyes teared up as he went over to hug her. “Awwww!”

Gosh she’d forgotten just how nice his hugs were. She whispered to him, “Sorry it took me so long.”

[STUFF HAPPENS]

Simple, she just had to find her way back to Glimmer’s room. She took another wrong turn without noticing, and then another one which she did notice. This was worse than the Whispering Woods! Adora backtracked, this time taking the correct turn before getting lost again. It must’ve been at least a half hour of her trying and failing, and carrying on before the worst thing that could possible happen, well, happened.

“Who are you?”

Adora froze, slowly looking up to find herself nearly toe to toe with Queen Angella. That Queen Angella. The Evil Queen Angella.

“I- I- uhm, s-say would you like to learn some cool facts?” Oh by the light, why hadn’t she let Catra sneak out with her!? Catra would’ve thought of a good lie! But Adora was alone, in her Horde Assassin uniform, facing Queen Angella at two in the morning. So she reached into her pocket and pulled out the stack of flip cards she’d made over the years. “Did you know that teeth aren’t actually considered bones? It's because they can't regenerate or heal themselves like bones do!"

The queen blinked rapidly at her, which Adora took as her cue to keep going.

"Did you know there are nights when none of the moons are in the sky? It's called a blackout and it only happens once a century. Fun bonus fact, we're overdue for a black out but no one is really sure when it'll hit next. Neat, huh!?"

"Yes," Queen Angella muttered, clearly about to signal for the guards when there was a pink poof of sparkles.

"Have you seen- oh! THERE you are!" Glimmer flipped around to quickly wrap her arm over Adora's shoulder's. "Thanks for finding her mom, okay gotta go!"

"Stop right there young lady-" but they vanished just as Adora heard an exasperated sounding, "GLIMMA!"

"And we're back! Mom found her." Glimmer quickly popped across the room before returning with a handful of soft clothes to change into.

"Woof," Bow looked at her sympathetically, "rough start, don't worry she's gonna love you and you're gonna love pancakes!"

Angella does eventually love Adora. Adora definitely loves pancakes. And when all is said and done she is quite proud of her new uniform with the royal guards.

Sunflower's Sunshine

Chapter Summary

Perfuma is here and a little distracted by a garden in need!

[Learning who Perfuma is, and why she was sent to do this cursed job. She eventually finds a garden which she starts searching for things to make a poison with (she has dried backups but would prefer to not use them) only to get sucked into all the different things that could make tea. And then the somewhat atrocious growing conditions. Clearly there was once a competent gardener but now there isn't and that just won't do!]

Perfuma winced as someone coughed behind her, suddenly realizing how much time she'd been spending tending the royal garden instead of slipping in to attack her target. With as much peace and dignity as she could, Perfuma wiped her hands clean and turned to wave at the interloper.

Any hope it was a guard or staff was crushed as Princess Glimmer stood with her hands on her hips and an exasperated glare.

"Uhm, hello! ...I don't suppose you'd believe me if I said I was the new head gardener?" Her target snorted, and looked mortified at having laughed. But oh, Perfuma giggled, there was truly nothing better than experiencing someone else's happiness! Such a shame she was going to be the one to end it as well, but the rules were rules and the roots of the garden could swallow a body whole to feed themselves. "Well it was worth a shot regardless."

"If you say so," Glimmer rolled her eyes before she flopped onto a nearby bench. "So, what's your deal anyways? Bow was supposed to-"

"Bow!" The magic she'd been gathering fell right from her hands, the garden's roots once more inert. "Bow actually made it here? Oh my- oh my goodness! We thought he, well, with the Whispering Woods being what they are- and he...oh. What did you do with him?”

The Princess stared at her for a moment before snapping her fingers, some harmless sparkles shimmered in and out of existence. “You’re Perfuma! Oh moons, you would not believe how jealous I was of you. Like, kind of embarrassing honestly, and I wouldn’t tell you normally except I know Adora would act like it’s-”

“ADORA!?” Perfuma wobbled on her feet. Here she’d take this job on to avenge her fallen friends, but apparently they were...what? Living here? In Brightmoon?? She slowly sank to sit in the thick zoysia grass and took a few calming breaths of air. This was a good thing. This was excellent news and a gift from the universe! Her stomach was still sick and roiling with the fading anger and fear. She simply sat with it, let herself focus on the way it slowly left without trying to force it in any direction.

By the time she remembered who she was talking to, Glimmer had already moved to sit with her in the grass. Perfuma frowned as she noticed the younger girl ripping up little pinches of the fragile blades to sprinkle back to the ground.

It took a moment before Glimmer seemed to realize she was being watched. And when she did she plastered on far too wide of a smile. “Hey, you back?”

“Yes, thank you for waiting.” Perfuma quickly wiped her eyes dry before clearing her throat. “Well, this is awkward now, they sent me here to maim and kill you.”

Glimmer looked around the garden with a raised brow and incredulous stare.

“Oh don’t misunderstand me, my specialty is poisons. But they wanted to make a point for the capture and killing of two of our youngest assassins.” Perfuma gently ran her hands across the ground, enjoying the warmth of the day moon and the cool press of the soil. “I don’t like using plants for them though, it’s just...I don’t know how to explain. Disrespectful?”

“...how?” Glimmer turned to face her, head tilting in curiosity as Perfuma lifted her hands and, much to her apparent amazement, grew a windflower in her hands.

“We need flora to survive, and they give us so many wonderful gifts. They can nourish us, shade us, protect us, even heal us.” She tucked the flower behind Glimmer’s ear before producing chamomile. “I like making tea, and medicine, and- and helping people.”

“So why stay with the Horde?”

Perfuma frowned at her, silently chastising her. “You know why.”

Her mouth flapped open and closed before she blew a long strand of pink hair out of her face. “I-! ...okay, yeah, maybe. So maybe this is an opportunity for you! To, you know, get out. Bow and Adora are my best friends, and based on what they’ve told me about you, I think you’d fit right in.”

Today will bring you unexpected gifts, take the opportunities presented to you.

Perfuma smiled again, blinking away another wave of tears. “I’d like that.”

Glimmer teleported less than a foot to be standing, and clapped her hands with a little hop before offering one to help her up. “Great! ...do you want to come in or should I leave you to it for a while?”

Perfuma was surprised by the strength in the Princess’s grip, but happily took the help. “Leave me to what?”

“The garden.” Glimmer smirked like they were both in on some wonderful joke. “I mean, you are the new head gardener, aren’t you?”

They both giggled at that, and when Glimmer offered her hand again, Perfuma let herself be led inside to her new life.

The Great Robot Uprising Has Been Delayed

Chapter Summary

> Entrapta gets a little bit lost thanks to a slightly evil tracker pad, and gets very much mistaken for something other than what she is.

[Entrapta is not an assassin, she ends up in Bright Moon under suspicious circumstances, which no she does not explain. She finds some old tech parts from Bow's work and slaps together a new robot friend who just happens to have flamethrower arms. AREN'T THEY GREAT!?!?!?? Bow gets puppy dog eyed because he recognizes her work from the tinkerer community and Glimmer is like, "Can you make cool killer robots and weapons for us?"

Entrapta: What like it's hard? Who's inventions haven't gone a little evil?

Everyone just assumes she's an assassin, Entrapta sees no need to correct this.]

"OH MY GOODNESS!!! IT'S YOU!"

Entrapta spun on her hair to look curiously at the unknown male behind her, who had a heart on his shirt and also hearts in his eyes. Curious!

"...yes? Who else would I be?" Entrapta quickly turned Franny away from an area of the workshop that looked suspiciously flammable. She could probably help them digitize their records over a few days, maybe get them in a private loop with a backup just in case. She did understand the benefits to having hard copies but having a digital and a digital backup was the only way to ensure that a workplace accident didn't destroy YEARS of research. Having had personal experience with that, it wasn't too hard to extrapolate that whoever ran this workshop didn't. She scurried over to the nearest tech, which was a tracker pad, to start on that project before getting thrown completely off course. “Oooooooo, this isn’t off the shelf. Homemade!”

It took seconds to undo the backing to take a quick teeny weeny peeky weaky! “Oh! I see, that is rather ingenious if I say so myself! Gems don’t have the same sort of magical capacity as, say, even a fragment of a runestone, but they do conduct all the same. Excellent soldering technique as well, although depending on the rosin you might want to redo them, Techitrust was found to be using subpar materials last week I think it was. Last week?” She re-wound her recorder but didn’t even get a chance to play it.

“I know! I was gutted,” The man had apparently followed her and was watching diligently over her shoulder with a notepad. “Tech, I trust. And I trusted Techitrust! But, I did already order new wire for it.”

“That’s great! ...who are you again?”

The man stuck his hand out, “I’m Bow, Techmaster Apprentice for Brightmoon. That’s-”

“Princess Glimmer,” Entrapta finished pulling out her Princess Alliance notes as she put the tracker pad back together again. “I’m well aware!”

Bow, Glimmer, and the Tall One all looked at one another with matching grins before looking at her again. She had the feeling that they’d somehow had a whole conversation in just a few looks. Faaaaaaaaaaascinating!

“Well, I guess we can excuse you trying to kill me then.” Glimmer laughed, although she seemed rather carefree for someone who thought an attempt had been made on her life.

“Oh no, I wasn’t trying to kill you. See, my tracker pad recently got a little virus and it’s a bit… eeeeevil at the moment, which happens sometimes. I’m sure you understand.” Entrapta was a little annoyed when they all smiled at one another again. It was rude to have secondary conversations when not everyone present could participate. She'd read all about it in an old set of Princess Prom rules!

"Sure, we," The Tall One apparently had an eye twitch as her mouth fell open an awkward amount and she repeatedly winked, "understand."

"...have you considered seeking professional help for that?" Entrapta asked, unsure why Glimmer and Bow were now laughing, but being funny was a good thing. Even if she didn't get the joke, usually it meant people liked her more!

"Actually, I kind of am right now!" Glimmer finally supplied when the Tall One started laughing and that triggered Bow to laugh again as well.

"You are?"

"Yeah! I mean, you can make a killer robot it looks like."

Hmm. Entrapta tapped her chin, "Killer robots? Not usually, I usually make more maids or butlers to help me out. Ooooooh, you mean Franny? She's meant to help in a kitchen, but I suppose I could tweak the flamethrowers to be better suited to a battlefield."

"Uhm," Bow, although still catching his breath from the laughing started, "That's- that's not exactly what Glimmer-"

"I said what I said." Glimmer said as she slapped a hand over her friend's mouth, showing a great level of trust and affection between them. "Think you're up for the task...I just realized I don't know your name."

"I'm Entrapta, hiiiiiii!" She waved with one hand, already digging around in Franny's chassis to get her wiring set more appropriately.

“Entrapta, perfect. This is going to be a beautiful friendship! What kind of breakfast foods do you like?”

Her brain had ground to a halt though. A friendship? “Are...are we friends? Already? I’ve never really had friends before.”

“Well you do now! I’m Adora,” the Tall One, AKA Adora, said with a big wave.

“Oh! Well this certainly is going much better than expected!” Entrapta laughed and bounced for a moment before remembering the second question. “Can you make mini pancakes shaped like pigs? They’re just so cute! And much more pleasant to eat that way too.”

“Mini pig pancakes, got it.” Glimmer chuckled as she grabbed Adora’s hand. “Alright, I’ll leave you two to your awesome nerdity. I need to go tell mom and dad about the assassination attempt and new friend. Bye!”

“Bye! ...wait, assassination?” Entrapta turned to ask Bow about that only to watch as he casually flicked his bow and turned it into a musical instrument. “SHOW ME EVERYTHING!!”

A Watery Grave, or, whaaaatever

Chapter Summary

> Mermista means business, so thank goodness for the ice cream! (And also Sea Hawk is here but he's just her ride, okay. Just. Her. Ride.)

[Mermista is actually trying to ditch Sea Hawk (in a way that he can follow her) while on the job. She actually almost drowns Glimmer in her bathtub, but then sees the ice cream cartons and shifts gears because she hasn't gotten to eat ice cream in forrrrrever! Glimmer offers it up happily, and mentions that Mermista could have all the ice cream she wants if she doesn't go through with it. They chat and Mermista ends up liking Glimmer and decides not to do it.

Sea Hawk crashes his flying boat just outside the castle and is generally awesomely embarrassing.]

Mermista is pretty sure she finally gave Hawk the slip, but not, like, in a way where he can't pick up the trail again. Just the kind where he'll be all dramatic about his now lost love only to retract it and then feel confident that he was a super cool tracker. He was not, in fact, a super cool tracker. Sea Hawk could barely keep track of his own head, but he was an excellent spy. Observant, charming, and disarming. It made him a pretty damn good assassin too, if he weren't so annoying.

"Ugghhhh." Mermista groaned and blushed to herself remembering how he'd started to sing in the castle town's square about adventure, and it wasn't even a hard rock ballad so she left him there to get it out of his system.

Also, it was, like, ten thousand times easier to sneak around when Sea Hawk wasn't with her play acting at sneaking.

She smiled softly to herself. What a dweeb. Maybe after this they'd finally be able to leave the Horde and then she was gonna marry him. So. Damn. Hard. His stupid mustache was going to spin and fall right off.

Something clanked softly and Mermista sunk further down into the cloudy bathwater with a grimace. On the plus side this bathtub was more like a small swimming pool and her fins were able to spread out. On the down side Princess Glimmer really enjoyed some awful tasting and smelling bath bomb that Mermista was pretending wasn't clogging up her gills. The only benefit to it was keeping the water fully opaque so no one would see her coming.

There was voices, then the door closing, and then humming as the princess got ready. Mermista floated a tiny bit closer to the surface, sharp shark like teeth bared as a hand dipped into the steaming water to test the temperature.

Bingo.

Mermista snatched the princesses wrist and yanked her into the water with a splash, her off had quickly pushed the self injecting syringe into her arm temporarily disabling her magic. Glimmer trashed, hands and feet flailing through the water to little avail. Mermista's tail was stronger than most people understood and it wasn't hard to maneuver them so she was on top using her weight and strength to keep the Princess of Brightmoon submerged. She hissed as the girl scratched her hard enough to draw blood jerking slightly. But it was enough to Glimmer to get her head above water for a gasp of air.

"UGGGGHHHHH!" Mermista groaned as she fought the princess back under, smacking her against a seat at the edge of the bath. It put Mermista's upper body out of the water as she snarled down at the pale bubbling water. "Stop. Fighting! Just make it easy on us both!"

She tensed her stomach just in time to negate most of the gut punch. "Like, seriously!?"

If she couldn’t keep the princess down they’d end up out of the water soon and that would really be the end of it. Mermista could fight on land but she wasn’t nearly as effective. She desperately looked around just in case Sea Hawk had managed to find her but was doing his dorky standing in a shadow routine until she noticed him.

There was no sign of Sea Hawk.

There was, however, a tub of ice cream.

Her stomach growled and mouth watered at the sight. It didn’t help that Shadow Weaver hadn’t sent them with enough supplies and rations for the missions, but oh Mermista missed ice cream more than almost anything else from before her capture and commission.

Glimmer was slowing down now. It would be over soon.

And yet word on the street was the princess had a habit of collecting her assassins. She’d had to sit through a whole orientation with several other potential candidates about not getting brainwashed or won over for trinkets and favors.

But it was for ICE CREAM and not something as stupid as a bauble.

Damn her.

Mermista yanked her up and let her cough to get some air back. The princess would be too disoriented and weak to fight back right now anyways, so if this went to hell the job could still be finished.

“Hey, princess girl, what flavor is the ice cream?”

“W-what!?” She wheezed looking incredulous.

Which, like, fair. Mermista would slap a would be assassin for punking out for food, but this was important.

“The ice cream? What flavor? I haven’t had any, in like, I dunno. Yeaaarrrs. Horde captivity sucks like that.”

Glimmer coughed roughly before croaking, “Ch-cholate chip.”

Mermista looked at it thoughtfully. “Mint?”

“Pfft,” the princess snorted, wiping away some water from her face, “I don’t like eating toothpaste thanks.”

“A woman of taste…” Mermista looked at it longingly.

“Thank you! It’s disgusting! And also, we have more flavors. Chocolate, strawberry, pretty sure there’s a cherry thing with chocolate chips, caramel swirl-”

“CARAMEL!?”

“Yup! And I can get it for you at the low low cost of not drowning me. Pretty please with a literal cherry on top?” Glimmer offered, only looking semi-desperate as she did. “I can even call Bow, Adora, and Perfuma over if that would help. Entrapta is impossible to find but she’s here too.”

Mermista hummed thoughtfully, “Yeaaaaaah, don’t know them, don’t care about them, but sure caramel swirl trade and immunity for the attempt.”

Glimmer snorted, “We haven’t exactly punished anyone yet, but you got the closest, so, good job I guess? Anyhow, be right back.”

Mermista sighed as the princess had to squint and scrunch her face extra hard to focus but she was able to teleport so that poison had been super oversold. Oh well. If guards came with her Mermista wasn’t too concerned, Sea Hawk was literally around here somewhere and he was good at the job if need be. That man lived to fight, sing, and drink and not in the order necessarily.

“There she is! She came out here with meeee, she’s my princess of the sea! MermiiiIIIIIIiiiiiista!” Sea Hawk vaulted over the low railing with a rakish grin, leaning one elbow against the tub edge and purposefully cocking his hips to make his butt pop up further. She hated that it kinda did it for her. With an enamored giggle he sing songed, “I heard the sonorous sounds of a successful drowning and followed my heart! And the sounds of drowning!”

“Oh my goodness.” She huffed to herself, blushing from the compliment and the cringe worthy delivery. “Stop being allll that.”

“Dashing?” He asked, eyes sparkling with far too much delight as he hammed it up for her, popping up right to flex. “Handsome? Beautiful? Some might even say….”

“Sea Hawk-” She growled.

“To die for, ha ha! Thought of that one myself!” He preened under her twitching deadpan glare.

“Yeah I noticed.”

There was a poof of sparkles that made Sea Hawk screech like a very small child as Glimmer held a carton aloft. “Caramel swirl!”

“Finally! I’ve been, like, suffering over here!” Mermista happily took it before waving her spoon at Sea Hawk. “Oh and, like, that’s Sea Hawk.”

“Princess Glimmer!” He posed dramatically, light sword already drawn and ignited. “We came here together to kill you, because with our love-”

Mermista grabbed him by his bandana and pulled his head underwater. “Ignore him. He’s just my ride. Just. My. Ride.”

Hawk gasped a little as he surfaced, hair drooping into his eyes and mustache comically deflated. “Too true darling!” He still leaned into Glimmer’s space to stage whisper, “She totally invited me.”

Glimmer looked between them, seeming to be completely lost. "...uh…right. Ice cream?"

"Oh my goodness, you have ice cream!?" Sea Hawk finally seemed to realize what Mermista had already torn into as she soaked in the tub. He slicked his hair back and wheezed as now cold water rolled down his back and then expertly twisted his mustache back into shape before taking a knee and putting his sword away. "My life for a tub of s'mores ice cream."

"I don't think we have that one." Glimmer sheepishly admitted. "Rocky road?"

"Close enough. Huzzah!"

"Huzzah or whatever," Mermista spoke around a giant spoonful of the best thing she'd ever eaten in her life.

"Huzzah!" Glimmer cheered far more enthusiastically as she grabbed Sea Hawk's arm and disappeared.

Huh. Well, the princess would learn in time. But it was her problem now.

It took less than thirty seconds for them to return. Glimmer looking as if this was a regular evening for her and Sea Hawk looking like the world's most pathetic wet dog. She raised an eyebrow at him and he croaked, "Her majesty Queen Angella says hello."

"UUUuuuuuuggggghhhhhhhh."

So, like, all in all?

Huge success on this one.

Chapter Summary

> Frosta goes on a self appointed mission and the author did her dirty by never expanding on it T-T

[Frosta decides that it's ridiculous that all these assassins keep getting captured, and is all, "I'm old enough and I know what I'm doing!" So off she goes to make an unsanctioned kill. But when she arrives Glimmer is in the middle of training against Bow and Adora and she's just SO COOL!! Frosta forgets why she was there for a hot minute and by the time she remembers she's already become friends with them and decides not to. She is also adopted by Spintossa.]

Frosta quietly dropped down hoping to find a way to slide around the training grounds to find her target, and wasmet with the sight of Princess Glimmer fighting.

Sparkling magic surrounded her fists, as Glimmer teleported around the arena. Hurling spells and sparkle bombs while wielding her mage staff and doling out the occasional punch or kick. She was here! She was there! She was everywhere!! Flying and fighting and holding her own against SHE-RA! And some dude with a bow, but, like, whatever. Princess Glimmer's cape snapped behind her and her gauntlets glinted in the daymoon and- and- and-

"So! Cool!" Frosta whispered to herself, hunkering down to watch.

This was just like the dream she had about Winter's Bane, but better because it was real!

Garden of Shadows

Chapter Summary

> Shadow Weaver values one thing above all, survival. Is anyone surprised this chapter is the darkest of them all, at least by this fics standards?

[Shadow Weaver has fallen from grace because the assassin's she's training keep fucking defecting. Catra is a rising star for doing her job, but SW knows that isn't true. She flees the system as well to avoid getting killed and figures the best place to go is this family adoption group.

Literally no one is happy about this, and she just doesn't get why. "But I changed sides, I'm helping you now. That makes me a good guy! You are all just so ungrateful."]

Well, it had been nice while it lasted. By some definition of the word, she was sure.

Shadow Weaver had never intended to join the Horde, but like most people there she hadn't had many choices during her "recruitment". Still, she'd managed to climb her way up out of the general cesspit and into a speciality track that afforded her many new luxuries and privileges. Or at least, it had, right up until Lord Prime began to fail spectacularly at winning the war. The tides shifted, a tenuous peace agreed to but not negotiated and signed, and now all was at a standstill. The megalomaniac seemed to think that cutting off the head of his enemies would kill the snake, but Weaver knew better. Kill one princess and two more would pop up out of the woodworks. Hell, even with her having specifically targeted royal blood lines and having once had her own collection of "would have beens" under her control, Shadow Weaver knew it was still not enough.

And then things had really gone sideways when Brightmoon refused to die. First Micah then Angella, and now their daughter.

Of course it was all pinned on her for some reason. She hadn't truly done anything though.

Sure, she'd sent Bow off to hopefully die in the wilderness. And then she'd truly believed Adora would be ready thanks to her desire for revenge. Perfuma had a perfect track record and understood subtly. Mermista had been one of their most successful assassins. Frosta was a rogue element!

But sure, she was the bad guy!

Lord Prime was displeased and time was running short, and now she had a bumbling buffoon of a princess and the girl. Shadow Weaver would never be rid of the reminder of how she was tricked into taking the wrong magicat, not only not a princess but magically inert. She should have sent Catra with Bow, gotten both of them away and focused Adora.

Oh well.

"I see there's only one true avenue left then." Shadow Weaver cast her gaze over her two remaining assassins and sneered under her mask, turning to face Lord Prime on the view screen once more. "I will go myself."

"What!?" Catra hissed and a quick twist of her fingers left the girl's mouth frozen shut.

"And who will take your place?" Lord Prime asked with that permanent smile of his. He knew Weaver was going to chafe if her legacy was ruined. He just didn't understand how it would pale in comparison to her drive to survive.

Time to place the last card in place. Give everyone exactly what they thought they wanted.

“Catra is competent for this, my Lord. I have personally raised her since before she could speak. No one understands my networks more thoroughly than she.”

If it wasn’t for her magic, Catra would have yelped something else. Instead her jaw locked up from the lightning and shadows stole her sounds. Stars, the girl never did understand the gentle touch and misdirections needed for politics.

Ultimately, that would work in Shadow Weaver’s favor.

With too much to learn on the spot, Catra wouldn’t be able to notice Weaver’s plans in time. With Scorpia tripping over her own feet to help, neither would she. With Prime believing she’d never abandon her life’s work to a pair of incompetents, and having to deal with their mistakes, he’d be distracted too.

The relevant files had already been burned, but Shadow Weaver knew there would be no fully hiding it. Brightmoon was winning not because they killed the assassins, but instead because of… ugh, it hurt to even think the words, the power of love- how cliche and terrible. But, if they would insist on taking in every Horde assassin who came, well then, Shadow Weaver could see which way the winds were blowing. Give it five or ten more years and the Horde would be gone for good, and she was not about to be caught on the losing side.

“Make it count, Shadow Weaver.” Lord Prime waved a hand and the screen turned off.

When she turned around, Scorpia was standing up straight tapping her claws together and Catra snapped up into attention.

“Do not mistake me child, I do not believe you will succeed during my time away.” It was always good to take some of that wind out of Catra’s sails, too much confidence and the girl became sloppy. “It should not take more than a week, I will leave immediately to capitalize on Princess Prom, and when I return I expect you to have cleaned up any messes you will cause. Am I understood?”

Catra wilted, but with her mouth still glued shut she could only nod and salute.

"Good. This is your chance, Catra. You asked for one, and I'm giving it." She drifted up to her, forcing her to crane her head back to keep eye contact. "Do not make either of us regret it."

She dispelled the magic as soon as she left the room, stopping by her quarter's long enough to grab her go bag and shovel a few extras inside of it. Princess Prom would get her into Brightmoon castle, sure, but if all went well it would be Princess Glimmer who would ensure her new teacher would remain there.

[SW does what she gonna do and is not met, weirdly enough, with open arms]

Double Tap

Chapter Summary

Scorpia flees the Horde with approval and joins the family

[Scorpia does not like the system and begs Catra to leave, she won't but also makes an opening for Scorpia to go by leaving her on the docket from Weaver to assassinate Glimmer. Part of her job is to stop defections after all. Scorpia flees to Bright Moon and accidentally sneaks in. Honestly she is just so impressed that everyone is being so chill about her being here, and they are all so nice too! Then she goes into one of the family breakfasts and is only noticed half way through.

Glimmer goes to welcome her and accidentally gets stung, Scorpia flails to grab her tail assuring them it's not deadly she'd need multiple stings to- and then stings Glimmer a second time on reflex when the Princess lurched towards her.

Glimmer is fine after her epic nap and headache, Scorpia wears a big flower on her stinger courtesy of Perfuma, and she fits right into the family.]

Oh man, this was even easier than Catra had said it would be!

Scorpia walked inside as the guards both turned and left for some reason, and after wandering around for a while she'd felt the vibrations of magic and followed them here. And oh, what a spread! Eggs, bacon, pancakes, oatmeal, fruit, yogurt- man, Scorpia had missed yogurt after the Horde had switched to ration bars made from whatever they could source. She still maintained that the new tree bark they switched to was grittier than whatever the previous flour source had been.

"Uhm," Scorpia started but apparently wasn't heard as the whole table was talking amongst themselves in various groups.

“Hello!” A princess with long purple hair stood up tall on… her hair. Oh princesses were so weird.

“Hiiiii,” Scorpia smiled awkwardly, hoping that she’d move on, but no such luck.

“Oh, are you new? It’s a lot when you first get here, but I can help!” Before she even knew what was happening, she was seated at the table with an empty plate. The princess continued, “Just grab whatever you’d like, we can always get more.”

“Oh gosh, really? I don’t want to intrude-”

“No intrusion! Family breakfast is important!” Hair slithered across the table and snagged a whole plate of miniature pancakes.

“Aw, well, thank you!” Scorpia could tell her smile was completely natural now. Sure the princess’s hair was kinda weird, but she was really nice. This was just such a nice welcome, no wonder everyone defected!

She was happily demolishing her second plate of plumerian toast, mumbling her thanks to the chefs to herself, when someone shrieked.

Her head snapped up looking around for the intrusion, ready to fight for the people who had taken her in so quickly only to realize they were looking at her. Whoops! Scorpia tried to chew faster so she could speak and properly introduce herself when Princess Glimmer herself laughed and then-

“AAHHH!!!”

Scorpia stared in embarrassed surprise as Glimmer swayed on her feet, having teleported over and scared her so bad she’d stung the poor girl. She dropped her fork and twisted as best she could to grab her tail to have control on it. “Oh my goodness, I am so, SO sorry about that! Force of habit! Don’t worry, one sting is totally fine, it's only if you get it several times in a row that it can be deadly!"

"Oh," the princess swayed on her feet and began to slur, "wow you are really muscled, that's cool! I can't muscle like that!"

"O-oh, I guess I am, huh? Well maybe I could help! I have a whole workout plan with supplements that I swear can do the trick for just about-"

And then Princess Glimmer lurched forwards to squeeze Scorpia's bicep, and Scorpia jumped at the sudden movement, dropping her tail, which, well, ha- th-this is really awkward now because see it… kinda… stung Princess Glimmer. Again. Twice, in fact. Rapid succession.

Scorpia stared in mute horror before she wheezed, "I am so sorry, I can fix this!"

"Let's let someone else fix it, okay buddy?"

Scorpia yelped and would have stung the poor guy who patted her back if the hair princess hadn't already grabbed her tail with said hair. Another princess then lifted a hand and before Scorpia knew what was happening a large flower was tied with vines over her stinger.

The Rest of It

Chapter Summary

What it says on the tin

Chapter 10: Cat Out of the Bag

[Catra is not digging this whole being the new Shadow Weaver thing. She never loved the system, but it's what she grew up in so whatever. She tried really hard to be someone, having gotten Prime's attention once Adora was gone (and thus Catra was able to shine a lot more brightly) she felt a need to prove him right. But having taken over Weaver's role means she can't actually do much and is now indirectly responsible for a lot of deaths because she has to rubber stamp it. Serious bummer and also not really what she wanted to do with herself. She decides that enough is enough, she's been at her desk job for a year and finally gets permission to assassinate Glimmer having proven worthy of the job.

Glimmer and Catra have their chemistry and fight one another for fun (Catra is pretty up front about "yeah my friend escaped here and I'm looking to too"), this is mistaken as an actual attempt on her life by the guards who see it and Adora fucking crash tackles Catra to save Glimmer. The misunderstanding is explain and Catra is a bit pissed that, "IS THIS WHERE YOU'VE BEEN THIS WHOLE TIME WHAT THE FUCK ADORA????"]

Chapter 11: Brother's Keeper

[Hordak has been in contact with Entrapta for years now, and decides he no longer wants to be the R&D guy for the Horde. He wants to work with Entrapta directly damn it all! But there is no one in the Horde who isn't an assassin so he first sets Prime up to die and then tries to leave unnoticed.

Unnoticed is the key word here. He couldn't leave without his twin Wrong Hordak who got hit with a beam or drugged or something and is not fit to stay alone in the Horde. But Wrong Hordak also doesn't understand what's happening and accidentally shouts goodbye to a guard as they drive past on their skiff.

They make it to Brightmoon to surrender, Hordak and Entrapta have a very touching reunion a la international friends who have only ever been online friends. Wrong Hordak takes to Entrapta like a duckling.

Glimmer is like, "Well fuck it fine. Two more for breakfast now I guess."]

Chapter 12: Epilogue

[Horde Prime knew Hordak left "surprises" for him and avoids everything as a consequence. But eating a piece of fruit he chokes on a pit and dies accidentally anyways causing the Horde to happily disband.

We finally get a low key breakfast with the fam just chilling.]

THE OUTLINE

Glimmer collects the assassins. Angella is like, "Wtf child." Micah is all about this, hell yeah family collection! (And they also can't say shit because they befriended Spinny and Nettossa who were sent to kill them)

Bow was really too young to be sent out and he would've never done it anyways.

Adora only seemed ready because she's a hard working natural brown noser.

Perfuma would much rather make tea than poison okay?

Entrapta was NOT an assassin, but mistaken for one thanks to her robot creations which have a habit of going a little bit eeeevil. She has not corrected them. :)

Mermista got pretty close but she wasn't into it and Glimmer has ice cream. (Sea Hawk is an assassin but simps so hard for Mermista that no one believes him).

Frosta straight up busted out to prove herself but then wasn't ready and also her self-assigned target is just SO COOL!

Shadow Weaver does not understand why they don't want the assassin trainer who still kinda digs assassination to be part of the family, she changed sides! People need to learn to let these things go, she's a good guy now for sure!

Scorpia runs away because she is a softy and doesn't want to kill! She is the most successful because she accidentally double stings Glimmer while trying to surrender out of habit.

Catra IS AN ASSASSIN who unlike her peers can actually do her fucking job...she also often finds reasons to help her targets escape and pretends to have taken care of it. She is secretly soft. She plans to help Glimmer fake her death to end the assassin stream but gets adopted anyways, she is also not happy because "WHAT THE FUCK ADORA????"

Hordak doesn't join the family but DOES join Entrapta, who he also thought was an assassin. This happens in part because his twin Wrong Hordak got amnesia and latched onto Entrapta like a duckling. (Just fucking kidding, Hordak likes to play like he's tough but he's part of the family breakfasts now! Wrong Hordak makes the breakfasts!)

Horde Prime chokes on a bagel and all is well :)
