Aunt Casta's Knitting Class for the Traumatized

by AuthorWithoutaName

Summary

It's after the war and unfortunately our heroes are still struggling with the events of... Prime? The eons long war with the Horde? Their lives? Anyway! Everyone's been busy and stressed. What's the best way to get our heroes to relax? Why, a knitting class taught by yours truly... Drum roll ...Aunt Casta!

(Writing for SPOP Creatively Flex weekly prompt! This week's prompt: (Casta teaches a knitting class (maybe to try and reduce everyone's stress))

Notes

Another week, another prompt that piqued my interest! (There have actually been several that have interested me but I haven't started and/or finished writing them yet...).

Hope ya'll enjoy the fic!

See the end of the work for more notes

“Augh!!!”

Bonk!

“Can someone please tell me why we’re doing this?” Catra groaned, her voice somewhat muffled.

Casta assumed that sound was Catra no doubt faceplanting the table, she wasn’t about to turn around and check though. She heard Adora murmur some reassurances to the feline. Knowing Adora, she probably had a hand on Catra’s back, or was rubbing her arm, or scratching the top of her head.

For a moment, she thought about checking up on the poor girl. Knowing the little she knew of Catra (mostly from what she had gleaned from Glimmer), that gesture wouldn’t be appreciated, at least not now. Maybe she would check up on her after the class, in private. Or she could ask Adora. Asking Adora would probably be the best thing to do.

“We’re doing this because…” Adora. “Because…” She started off with enthusiasm (as she often did), but as she pondered Catra’s question, the zeal in her voice tapered off.

“Because…” She continued. Casta turned then and glanced over at Adora and Catra. Catra’s tail was thrashing behind her. Her face was still on the table. And just as she thought, Adora had a hand on her back and was running it up and down, trying to sooth her.

Everyone was given three different colored balls of yarn for this class. They had their pick of colors. Of the three yarn balls Catra had, only one remained untouched. The red yarn was in a messy pile in front of it. Some of it was strung across the table (only in front of herself and Adora), some was hanging loosely off her arm (and for some reason the back of her head and one of her ears, which twitched, probably in irritation). The other ball of yarn was nowhere to be seen.

Adora was frowning as she tried to think of an answer to Catra's question. She wasn't even sure why they were here. Of course she wasn't. After all, Casta hadn't exactly explained anything at dinner last night. All she had told them (Glimmer, Bow, Adora, and Catra) last night was to meet her in the (former) War Room.

"...Because…" Adora was still stammering. Casta could see the gears in her head turning as she desperately racked her brain for a good (or knowing Adora, perfect) response to Catra's question. She had stopped rubbing Catra's back, her face screwed into concentration.

…Poor girl… Maybe it would be best to cut in and put her out of misery.

Before she could, Bow chimed in, his voice as cheerful as ever, "We're doing this to learn a new skill, or a hobby!" Casta's mouth had been hanging, slightly agape as she had intended on answering both Adora and Catra.

"Yeah… I don't know if I'm crazy about this one," Glimmer muttered, irritably. The pink yarn on her needle slid off, resulting in the deepest, loudest sigh Casta had ever heard.

Catra's head turned, lifting half of her face away from the table. She stared at Glimmer, a mischievous glint in her eyes and cheeky smile on her face. One of her fangs was poking out as she laughed, "See, Adora! I'm not the only one who finds this lame! Sparkles doesn't like this either! And it's her– A-Aunt…?" She asked the last word, as if uncertain she had heard that right the night before. Given what Casta knew about Adora's upbringing in the Horde though, she was sure Catra just wasn't sure what an 'aunt' was.

"Catra! Shhh…" Adora's face turned red and she looked horrified.

"This is stupid," Catra muttered, pushing herself back into a proper sitting position. Her tail didn't stop moving. It was still thrashing. Every now and then, Casta would hear a thump as it hit Adora.

Before Casta could say anything, a blue ball of yarn rolled out from under the (former) war table. Melog jumped out from under the table, trailing after it, and batting it around as they got close. So that's where it went… She wasn't sure if Melog getting a hold of the yarn was an accident or if Catra (or even someone else from the BFS) had just given the space-cat the yarn.

"Yeah, Aunt Casta," Glimmer began, leaning back into her chair, "I don't think knitting is for… any of us, really."

"I don't know, Glim," Bow flashed her niece a warm smile, "I'm enjoying it! And Adora's been making some good progress on her… Um… What were you making again?"

"Oh! A scarf!" Adora carefully lifted the red knitted, rectangular cloth up for Bow to see.

"Well, it looks great!" Bow exclaimed with a wide smile.

Glimmer and Catra nodded in agreement. Catra's tail stopped thrashing and instead swayed lazily now. It drifted over to Adora's shoulder and playfully tapped her shoulder a couple of times.

It was a good… attempt… But Casta had her doubts that it would last more than an hour (and that was being generous) if worn. The stitches were far apart and looked rather flimsy. Still, she wasn't about to pop Adora's bubble, at least not in front of everyone else. If Adora decided to continue with knitting though, Casta would offer to give her private lessons to improve.

"What did you start making, Bow?" Adora asked. Her face was still red, but whether that was from her embarrassment towards Catra because she called the class 'lame' or because Bow had put her in the spotlight, Casta wasn't sure.

"Oh!" He lifted his work up for all to see. It was pink and nearly a perfect square. "A coaster! I figured it would be good practice." He turned it over in his hands, as if admiring his handiwork. For a beginner it was good. The stitches were close together.

"Well, I made a long ass piece of string," Catra said with an irritated huff. She plucked the end of the string and held it up for all to see.

"Still not as bad as mine, Horde Scum," Glimmer held up both of her needles and a messy bun of yarn that was apparently mixed in with the needles.

Catra smirked. Her demeanor relaxed. Good. The point of this class wasn't for them to stress themselves out by trying to create something. The point of this class was for them to relax, to hopefully find a hobby that might help to give them an outlet in their free time. Soon Adora and Bow began talking, trying to show their respective partners how to start knitting.

Casta shook her head and smiled to herself. Bow might be able to help Glimmer. Maybe. But Adora… Her gaze shifted over to Adora and Catra. Catra was watching Adora. Intensely. But Casta wasn't sure if she was actually paying attention to what Adora was trying to teach her, which may be good. Adora could learn knitting eventually. But today, with her skill level, she was no teacher. Still, the point of today was to relax, and if this is what it took, then that was alright by Casta.

End Notes

Thank ya'll so much for reading!! Any kudos and/or comments gives me a little extra dopamine for my day!

I think this is gonna be my last SPOP fic for 2025, possibly my last update for this year (we'll see if I finish the Deltarune or Arcane one-shot this week). Happy holidays, everyone! Happy new year's as well!

Please drop by the Archive and comment to let the creator know if you enjoyed their work!
