Catch Me If You Can

by pr1m4d0nn4

Summary

Adora—better known as She-Ra, the city's most promising young superhero—tracks down Catra, the elusive cat burglar who's been toying with the city's authorities for months.

Notes

Femslash February Day 23: Superhero/Villain AU

Adora finally has her cornered.

Catra—the city's most infuriating, elusive, and annoyingly attractive thief—is perched on the edge of a rooftop, her tail flicking lazily behind her. She looks entirely too pleased with herself, considering she just led a powerful superhero on a wild chase across half a dozen buildings.

Adora stands a few feet away, catching her breath. "End of the line, Catra."

Catra smirks, tilting her head. "You always say that."

Adora clenches her jaw. She does, in fact, always say that. And yet, somehow, Catra always gets away.

Not this time.

Not after weeks of stolen artifacts, broken security systems, and taunting little notes left at crime scenes, all signed with an infuriatingly smug little cat doodle.

Adora steps forward, shoulders squared. "You're not escaping tonight."

Catra's ears twitch, golden eyes glinting under the city's neon glow. "Oh? And how do you plan to stop me, hero? "

She purrs the last word, and Adora hates how it sends a shiver down her spine.

Focus.

She's a hero.

She has a job to do.

Adora plants her feet, gripping the hilt of the Sword of Protection strapped to her back. "You're turning yourself in."

Catra laughs. Laughs.

It’s low and infuriatingly smug, her fangs flashing as she grins.

“Oh, She-Ra,” she says, voice dripping with amusement. “You’re so cute when you’re trying to act tough.”

Adora flushes, her grip tightening. “I’m serious.”

Catra stretches—stretches, like she’s a lazy house cat, completely unbothered. “And I’m seriously about to escape again.”

Adora lunges.

Catra moves fast—too fast. But this time, Adora anticipates it. She cuts her off, grabbing her wrist before she can leap.

Catra’s breath catches—just slightly.

For the first time all night, she looks surprised.

Adora takes full advantage, twisting Catra’s arm just enough to pull her forward. Before Catra can wriggle free, Adora’s other arm comes around her waist, pinning her against her chest.

Victory.

Catra blinks up at her, lips curving into a slow, dangerous smile.

“Well, well,” she hums, tilting her head. “Didn’t know you liked getting this close, hero. ”

Adora’s entire brain short-circuits.

“I—that’s not—”

Catra leans in, voice dropping lower. “You chased me across half the city for this, huh?”

Adora freezes.

Because suddenly, she's aware—way too aware—of how close they are.

Catra's breath is warm against her skin. Her body is soft, pressed against Adora's own. Her scent—something vaguely smoky and wild—fills Adora's lungs.

It's distracting.

And Catra knows it.

"Wh—" Adora clears her throat, trying desperately to regain control of the situation. "What were you even stealing this time?"

Catra grins, slow and sharp. "Wouldn't you like to know?"

Adora scowls. "Yes. That's literally my job."

Catra shrugs, entirely too pleased with herself. "It was just a little break-in. Barely worth your time."

Adora narrows her eyes. "You crashed through the mayor's penthouse window."

Catra smirks. "Okay, that part was fun."

Adora groans. "Why do you make everything so difficult?"

Catra hums, shifting just enough that her nose almost brushes Adora's. "Maybe I like watching you struggle."

Adora's pulse spikes.

Her hold on Catra's wrist loosens—just for a second—but it's enough.

Catra twists free, flipping gracefully out of Adora's grasp.

Adora lunges to grab her again—

But too late.

Catra backflips off the edge of the rooftop, landing effortlessly on the fire escape below. She perches on the railing, smirking up at Adora.

Adora stands there, seething, hands clenched into fists.

“Catra.”

Catra grins. “You’re cute when you’re mad, too.”

Adora grits her teeth. “You—”

“Later, She-Ra!” Catra salutes—then vanishes into the shadows.

Adora swears loudly, running to the edge of the building—

Gone.

She’s gone.

Adora presses her fingers to her temples, exasperated beyond belief.

“She’s going to be the death of me.”

Still—

She can’t stop the small, helpless smile tugging at her lips.
