Tales of the Grand Prix: Shadows of the Shining Sun

by MaxxPhoenixV1

Summary

It's the road to the Grand Prix, the greatest stage on the WGSA's calendar, Alura Starwalker, known to the world as Shadow Weaver, doesn't have a dance partner, or at least, she didn't until the Fairy of the Shining Sun, Princess Stella Flare of Solaria. After all, who better to take on the darkest shadows than the brightest light? The stage is set and the die is cast! It's time for the Road to the Grand Prix!

Notes

So, I'm supposed to be off the internet to take care of some issues I have. Basically, I've hurt a lot of people and I need to get help to address my problems. For more detail, I left this document:

https://docs.google.com/document/d/1GwL2RSeTPAYMQhMyZhVY6i2Kzo7UWvQZuyBb6Y-9O9k/edit?usp=sharing

Don't expect an update for a while. If you don't wanna support me after reading the doc, I completely understand. I uploaded this when I did because somebody really wanted to see this fic.

Chapter 1

Bitches, Bros and Non-Binary Hoes…..Welcome to WGSA Saturday Night PULSE!

In a dazzling display of pyrotechnics, bright blue and purple fireworks erupted from either side of the stage, backdropped by the moving chaser lights surrounding the borders. After a moment, the pyro stopped, allowing Divide the Day's "Let it Roll" to blast through the packed arena. The cameras swept over the blue and purple lit, amped up crowd, ready for a grand night of action.

"It's Saturday Night, and you know what that means! This is Saturday Night PULSE!"

The camera panned to our announce team, James Fatal and the self-proclaimed savior of wrestling, Chris Danger!”

“Ladies and gents, I am your host, Chris Danger, along with my broadcast partner, James Fatal!”said Danger.

“Damn straight,” said James, “We were still riding the high of an amazing Mega Rumble, where we saw the Fairy of Animals, Roxy Knight, win from the 7th position, lasting eliminating Shaggy to punch her ticket to the Grand Prix, and we can tell you right now, Roxy did not hesitate to choose her opponent for the big show of shows, for the WSGA Championship, Roxy will face the Princess of Power, She-Ra in Night 2’s main event! Later tonight, we'll begin qualifers for the Penetration Chamber to crown the #1 contender for the WGSA Grand Championship!”

“Well, James, my boy, while we’re on the subject of the She-Ra, look!” Danger shouted.

Poppy’s “Scary Mask” ripped through the arena, bathing the venue in crime scene red and graveyard purple, signaling the arrival of Alura Starwalker, better known to the world as the Shadow Weaver, clad in a black and red leather biker jacket, however, the most striking feature about Shadow Weaver, was the absence of her mask, a relic of a past the sorceress has left behind. Notably, she held a black binder in her hand.

She has made great strides to redeem herself from all of her misdeeds, however, she was still not a very nice person, but she IS a better person, somehow earning the love of Castaspella for reasons that eluded her, but was not important, what WAS important was the announcement Shads was about to make.

"3rd place. I finished 3rd place at last night's Mega Rumble. I've heard what people have been saying, that I've done well to last that long from the number 1 spot, but I am not satisfied, I want to fight at the Grand Prix, to that end, I am putting out an open challenge, in my hand is a contract, so come on! Who has the courage to step into the darkness?"

As if on cue, the Fairy of the Shining Sun, Princess Stella of Solaria, emerged with the confidant swagger that only she could carry. Upon entering the ring, Stella snatched the contract from Shadow Weaver's hand, pulled out a pen, scribbled her signature on the dotted line before closing the binder, pushing it into Shads' chest and pointing to the sign.

But it was not over, yet. Stella quickly grabbed a microphone and spoke into it.

"Shadow Weaver," she began, "You've hurt a lot of people. Nobody should've been able to come back from that, but you did. You made amends, and for that, you have my respect. However, you need to understand, after everything me and the Winx had been through, in the grand scale that is my life, you do not scare me. You do not intimidate me.

"You, Shadow Weaver, have been on a PPV hot streak as of late. Sixteen and oh? Nice job. But know this: My light will forever outshine your darkness. And at the Grand Prix, I am going to break your streak and mystique. I'll see you at the Grand Prix, darling."

Stella's words were met with a mix of cheers and boos from the crowd. Shadow Weaver herself remained silent, her expression unreadable. But Stella could see the anger burning in her eyes.

"You think you're so tough," Shadow Weaver said finally. "But you're just a little girl playing dress-up. You're no match for me."

"We'll see about that," Stella said. "The Grand Prix is only a few weeks away. I suggest you start training hard."

With that, Stella turned and walked away, leaving Shadow Weaver standing alone in the ring.

The crowd erupted into cheers as Stella made her way back to the locker room. She had stood up to Shadow Weaver and told her exactly what she thought of her. And she had done it in front of a sold-out arena. It was a moment that Stella would never forget.

But she knew that the real battle was still to come. The Grand Prix was only a few weeks away, and she would need to be at her very best if she wanted to defeat Shadow Weaver. But she was confident that she could do it. After all, she had the Winx by her side. And together, they were unstoppable.

Week 2

Situated backstage, a large curtain, lit in blue and purple, accompanied by a large monitor brandishing the show's logo served as the backdrop for the upcoming interview. Donned in a lovely sports coat, the dapper interviewer was ready to present his guest.

"Please welcome my guest at this time, the Shadow Weaver, Alura Stawalker!"

The camera panned over to the imposing sorceress, an almost malicious grin spread across her scarred visage.

"Shadow Weaver, last week, your open challenge was answered by none other than the Princess Stella Flare of the legendary Winx Club, how are you feeling, heading into this high profile match at the Grand Prix?"

With a smirk, Shadow Weaver grabbed the microphone and spoke cooly into the hard camera. "Princess Stella of Solaria, I know what you and the Winx Club have accomplished, so I know not to underestimate you. At the Grand Prix, you'd be wise not to underestimate me!"

When Shads handed the microphone back to the interviewer, he immediately said, "Well, Shadow Weaver is a woman of a few words, but Stella is actually in the ring right now! Wonder what she'll have to say!"

Sure enough, Stella bounced off the ropes before homing to a halt in the center, soaking in the cheers of the amped up crowd.

"Ladies and gents! Welcome to Saturday Night Pulse! Last week, I set up a dream match for the Grand Prix. Since it's Shadow Weaver I'll be facing, I plan on making my road to the Grand Prix shine as bright as the sun and moon. To that end…"

Stella held up her phone, protected by a vibrant orange and fuschia phone case. "This is where all of you come in! I want to face one of the Princesses of Power at the Challengers Gala next week, and you're all gonna vote for my opponent! Will be the imposing Scorpia? Will I grab one of the other Winx so I can tag-team it against Spinnerella and Netossa? Hell, maybe you guys will vote for me to eclipse the Challenger Gala against Queen Glimmer? The possibilities are endless! Ciao, everyone!

Some time later, Shadow Weaver was taping up her fists, preparing for the night ahead, when there was a knock at the door. Shads didn't bother to look up, as she knew who the interloper in question was: "What do you want, Castaspella?"

The current head of Mystacor waltz with a slight scent of red wine emanating from her body. It was a scent Shadow Weaver knew all too well from years of drowning her sorrow in the stuff herself.

Castaspella ran her fingers through the older sorceress's hair. Had anyone else done that, they would have lost their fingers, but Casta and Shads had a rather…intimate connection.

Casta whispered into Shadow Weaver's ear. "I just wanted to wish you good luck tonight, and at the Grand Prix, and then, maybe...we could have our own wrestling match!"

With a sigh, Shadow Weaver let Castaspella straddle her for a bit, before moving her away. "I'm not fucking you right now, go home, you're drunk. I must focus on my match against Stella Flare, who knows what she has planned at next week's Challenger Gala....

"Well, speaking of the Winx, I heard Mirta and Lucy are in a qualifier match for the $50,000 Sapphic Showdown. I bet if we'd tagged together, we may win, even over the likes of Team Chaggie…" Casta cooed.

The unimpressed Shads rolled her eyes. "Why would I waste my time beating up a bunch of weaklings for money? I'm already rich and I've got nothing to prove."

Castaspella rolled her eyes cooly. "It's okay, Shads. We'll talk later. I've got dinner reservations, so I'll wait for you after the show…"

Blowing a kiss, Casta sauntered off as Shadow Weaver rolled her eyes.

"Jebuss Krist…" the old sorceress muttered to herself. This was gonna be a long night.

Later that night…

"Here is your winner, Alura Starwalker, THE SHADOW WEAVER!" The announcer's voice boomed through the arena was Shadow Weaver, who had barely broken a sweat, looked at the aftermath of a quick, and quite frankly embarrassing squashing Ruby Rose of Team RWBY. Slowly, Shadow Weaver walked backwards up the ramp, but as she turned around to head to the guerilla, she had found herself with the Staff of Solaria pointed right at her next! At point black range! Held firmly in the grasp of its current owner, Princess Stella Flare of Solaria. "You should really be more careful, Shadow Weaver! You'd never know what you could run into, darling!" she taunted as she casually twirled her staff. This was quite the feat of strength to those who knew of solarian steel, it was one of the heaviest materials in the magic dimension!

With a dispassionate sigh, Shadow Weaver conjured up a dark pellet of magic and shot it at the fairy.

With a smug expression, Stella slightly craned her head, allowing the offending pellet to sail past her and pierced the side of the screen, sending sparks and smoke flying around the two rivals.

With a wink, Stella booped Shads on the nose and flew off.

The commentary said it best: “The Road to the Grand Prix is heating up! What’s gonna happen at the Challengers Gala? Tune in next week!”
