When an angel gets behind a steering wheel

by ChaoticAroAce

Summary

You know those anti-accident ads? The ones that warn you to stay attentive while driving. Yeah, the ones you're forced to watch while you learn to drive that you promptly ignore because it's common sense to look ahead while driving.

What those don't prep you for are people who might as well be the second coming of Flash who have an affinity for jaywalking.

(aka the shoulder pop AU but make it seamista)

You know those anti-accident ads? The ones that warn you to stay attentive while driving. Yeah, the ones you're forced to watch while you learn to drive that you promptly ignore because it's common sense to look ahead while driving.

What those don't prep you for are people who might as well be the second coming of Flash who have an affinity for jaywalking.

Mermista wasn't sure if she wished they did, or if the fact that she had a banger story to tell when playing two truths and a lie was worth the dip her insurance score was about to take.

And it wasn't just two truths and a lie. This was a story she was talking about wherever with whoever. And it had everybody cracking up left and right. Not because she hit somebody with her car. That part was very much not funny and very serious. It was more what happened afterwards that was just so bizarre that it was kind of funny.

''Hey Mista, tell them about the guy!" Glimmer was squealing, waving her over to the end of the bar where she, Perfuma, Adora, and now Netossa and Spinerella were huddled up.

''Again?" Mermista loudly complained. Which was totally for show as she slowly trudged over.

By the time she had made it, there was a new line of shots in front of the group. Which she gratefully and a little less elegantly downed. Waiting for everyone to do so before recounting her story. Or so she thought.

''Okay, so I hit someone with my car last Friday." The Tequila practically shot back out of Netossa's nose at that. Spineralla was holding her and stroking her hair as her wife squirmed, spluttered, and coughed in her arms.

‘’WhaT the FucK? I thought you said this was supposed to be funny.” She wheezed.

The heavily intoxicated Glimmer was already a giggly mess. ‘’You just wait!”

Mermista just pushed on. ‘’On accident, obvi. I swear the guy was a fucking maniac. One second, I’m driving toward my apartment complex, the next he’s just there. I barely had time to brake.” She recalled. Thankfully, the alcohol made her forget all about the picture of that very moment or the pure terror she’d felt.

‘’So, I immediately get out of the car. And the guy is just lying there- HE WAS ALIVE! Very much alive.” She clarified when she registered the terrified look both Netossa and Spinerella were sporting. ‘’But he was kind of. Pfft-‘’ She had to pause a second to laugh. ‘’Do you know those gluetrap memes?”

Adora had already pulled it up and was showing it to their friends. Glimmer was giggling even louder now and had to even hide her head in her arms to conceal a grunt. Netossa and Spinerella looked slightly less horrified, even smirking a little.

‘’Was that really your first thought in that moment?” Netossa questioned.

‘’Yeah, I told him to hold still so I could take a picture and post it- OF COURSE THE FUCK NOT! I WAS MORTIFIED!” Mermista barked. ‘’Anyway, so he’s… There, and I’m just kind of frozen, not knowing what the fuck to do. I can barely get a coherent sentence out, because I notice that one of his limbs is definitely not where it should be. And I’m, like, so freaked out.”

While listening, the others had begun leaning in closer. Gazes set on hers- mostly. Adora’s vision was clearly tanking. That, or Mermista had something on her cheek. Not that it mattered.

‘’After a while, he starts moaning in pain. So, finally, my brain starts reacting, and I start apologizing profusely. I try to help him get up, but before I can do so, he pushes himself up to sit and he rubs his head for a while, squinting.” To emphasize her point, she starts squinting. ‘’Oh, and his shoulder is like super fucked up . It was like here.” She drags out that last part, slurring ever so slightly. With her hand, she gestures to a general area in front of her chest. One that’s definitely no place for a shoulder.

Adora’s face twisted in disgust, as if she hadn’t heard this story for the third time that night. Perfuma had moved behind Mermista, practically snuggling into her hair. She simply let it happen.

‘’This is the best part! ” Glimmer whisper yelled to Spinnerella and ‘Tossa, pointing into nothingness.

‘’Thank you for the prepwork,” Mermista looked over at her before she continued. ‘’So, he’s sitting there now rubbing his fucked up shoulder. And I’m doing- Something; making a fucking fool of myself! Then he just- He just- Pushes his shoulder back into place. I swear I heard it pop or something… Oh! And he’s getting up as well.” She throws her arms up in despair. Still able to vividly remember her frustration with the man.

For this next part Mermista felt obligated to clarify something, mostly for her own sanity. ‘’Okay, I promise I’m not making this shit up. I couldn’t if I tried.”

‘’But he goes," she put on her best douchy voice. The one that she’d drunkenly perfected. ‘’I thought angels were supposed to be in heaven, not hit you with their car.” She made sure to slur the words extra hard. Just how she remembered him saying it.

Which, of course, worked its magic and made all of them laugh.

‘’I was not in the right mindspace to acknowledge his pick up line- It wasn’t even a pick up line… His joke, his really bad joke. But whatever, I keep asking him about his shoulder and telling him that he should definitely get it checked out. And he keeps waving me off and giving me the most ominous answers, telling me ‘It’s just one of those days’ and that it’s, like, no biggie. And I keep trying to tell him that, no, he definitely needs to go to a hospital and whatever. He’s not accepting help, so I’m just like ‘ Whatever, here let’s exchange numbers and be done with this . And he just goes ‘Seriously? Score… ”

At that, the entire group started breaking out into hysteria. Netossa almost aggressively patting her on the back as she simultaneously tried to dap her up.

‘’So, our insurances can fight this out, I say. And he, like, lags for a second and then goes ‘Yeah, of course, I knew that. ”

‘’What a weirdo…” Spinerella laughed.

‘’Yeah…” Mermista agreed, smiling. At the situation, of course. No other reason…

‘’So, how did you make it up to him?” Spinerella asked.

‘’I what?” Mermista raised an eyebrow.

‘’I mean, you did run him over. That’s a criminal offense. You could at least apologize and check back in.” Everyone was nodding along as if this was the morally correct next step.

‘’My insurance is covering his medical bills, that’s apology enough. I think it’s just your nice bone peeking is just through.” Mermista reasoned. Promptly realizing her insurance had yet to give her a call about this. Which could only mean he had not contacted anyone about this situation because her insurance loved being on her ass for every little minor thing. Let alone a charge.

That was bad.

She should definitely check in. Just to remind him to contact his insurance.

She told herself to put a pin into that thought. She needed a couple of drinks first…

‘’Do you know why you’re here, Sebastian?”

‘’Not really. No.” It wasn’t every day that you were plucked out of your own classroom by the school psychologist herself. First thing in the morning, no less. There must’ve been some sort of mandatory survey going on that he’d missed in the Teams chat.

‘’I’ve been told that you’ve gotten into some sort of accident on Friday.” Castaspella brushed the dark brown strands of hair that framed her face behind her ears. Propping her elbows up on the table in front of her. Hands folding together, covering the lower half of her face. As if she were the main character in some sort of detective movie.

‘’I have… How do you know about that?” Leaning closer.

‘’Your students told me. They’re worried for you, Sebastian.” She leaned forward as she said it, voice dripping with something. Taking one of his hands in hers.

Sea Hawk cleared his throat, slowly removing his hand from her grasp. Leaning away, he tsked ‘’Worried? Oh, they don’t need to be worried.” He wiped his hand on his jeans under the table.

Castaspella awkwardly cleared her throat as well. Getting her protocol and pen out. ‘’Mind telling me what happened?”

He did mind. Mostly because it meant being stuck in here with her even longer. But he knew how persistent Casta was. He wasn’t getting out of here until he told her something. Not that it was a story worth telling.

At least not to a damn school psychologist.

He tried to piece together a couple of memories from that evening. Most of it was a blur of flashing by lights and steel crashing into flesh. ‘’Well, you could say I was in a tad of a hurry that night. Not for any particular reason. I just always kind of am getting home.”

Casta nodded, taking notes of whatever she’d apparently gathered out of that short statement.

‘’There’s this street rounding the corner to my place. That is usually vacant. Safe for the unbelievably loud motorcycle my neighbour has.” Sea Hawk complained, shaking his head. ‘’Anyhow, as you might have guessed, that day it wasn’t.”

It’d happened so fast he couldn’t even remember how it happened. All he remembered was the immense pain consuming his entire body. And the weird hollow feeling in his lungs when he came back to himself. ‘’I’ll spare you the details. But I got hit as I was crossing the street.”

Casta was now going on about how she’d prefer if he’d tell her everything he remembered so she could determine how much trauma he now suffered from. Or something along those lines. He wasn’t really focusing on her.

The next thing he remembered was the beautiful woman who was yelling at him. What she wanted from him, he couldn’t remember. All he knew was that she now kept appearing in his dreams. It had gotten to the point where Sea Hawk was not entirely sure if he’d made her up or if she’d really been there. Maybe he dealt with trauma by making up imaginary friends now.

Not that this was anything that had to do with trauma. Again, he barely even remembered anything from it. What you don’t know can’t hurt you. Duh.

‘’There was this woman. She kept apologizing and telling me to wait for an ambulance.”

‘’Ambulance? So, you were hurt? Where?”

‘’My shoulder popped out, I think. She was beautiful, though. She had two eyes, long hair…”

Casta looked at him like she truly believed that he’d finally fully lost it.

‘’I- Okay, it’s hard to describe. But she was pretty. Pretty eyes, pretty hair… When I walk home now, I sometimes wish she’d drive me over again. Not in a ‘I want to be hit by a car’ way but in a ‘I wanna see her again’ way.”

She sighed, entirely defeated. ‘’Okay, I’m sending you to Lonnie right away to check out your shoulder… also your head while we’re at it. And I think you could use a reminder of how to safely cross a street.”

Sea Hawk finally snapped out of his gorgeous-woman-induced trance. ‘’If you’re suggesting I accompany the little ones when going to the Department of Transportation this Thursday, you can forget it.”

‘’I’m not suggesting you accompany them. I’m ordering you to do so.” She sternly looked at him, tight-lipped.

Entirely defeated, he sighed.

‘’Am I free to go?”

‘’You are.”

After a thorough and painful inspection by their head nurse, Lonnie, which he left 100mg of painkillers heavier, he marched his way back to his classroom. Entirely unattended for almost the whole morning. He knew that since he could hear their barking three floors away.

To the probable displeasure of their principal, Angella, he dramatically kicked open the door.

‘’Okay, who of you ratted me out to Ms. Spella?” For the first time in three hours, the whole class was quiet. Finally. But he did want an answer.

‘’So?” He questioned again as he sat down in his chair. Overlooking them all.

A girl in the back row, Frosta, who normally wasn’t allowed to sit back there, (He’d tell her to go back to her original seat, all the way in the front later.) spoke up. ‘’Mister, with all due respect. You were holding a lesson on road safety yesterday. You’re our math teacher.”

He blinked, ‘’I did? Why didn’t any of you stop me? Of course, that was the part they conveniently left out when talking to Casta. Maybe she’d spared him from having to spend his Thursday with a bunch of third graders if she knew.

A collective groan traveled through the class.

‘’Now, now. Let’s get back to class.” He opened his math lecture to a random page. ‘’If Miss Parker has two cars and gets hit by four of them. How many-‘’

The collective groan got even louder.

‘’I’m kidding! Gosh, you kids are no fun.”

Waking up on Monday was literal hell. She was for sure hungover. That much she realized right away. Her head was spinning as she struggled to get up and out of bed. When going out, she hadn’t intended to go as hard as she undeniably went, and she was deeply regretting it now. Was she regretting getting drunk or not foreseeing it? Either or, honestly.

Once she managed to get up, she trudged over to the bathroom, but not before making a stop at the kitchen to get a glass. She filled it with water before taking an advill, stored behind her bathroom mirror. Once that was taken care of, she walked back to her room to stumble back into bed.

She found her phone somewhere between her sheets and went to check it, realizing it was out of battery. So, she hooked it up to the charger next to her bed. Pretty soon, she was knocked out again.

The next time she woke up, her phone was at 70 percent, and her head was feeling slightly better. She rolled over and plucked the phone from its charger. Taking it with her as she once again made her way back to the kitchen. Feeling particularly picky due to the unfortunate nausea she was rewarded with this morning, she got a pack of sad, flavorless crackers out of her cupboard and began munching on them. She scrolled through her phone checking her messages. One from Perfuma asking if she got home safe. Another from Netossa, a really blurry selfie the two of them must've taken. A couple of others from her groupchats. She suddenly stopped eating as she reached the last message. Technically, the oldest one in her inbox.

It was from Sea Hawk. The guy she'd hit with her car.

She set her stale cracker onto the kitchen island. He must've finally contacted his insurance about the situation. Funny , hadn't she literally thought about that yesterday?

Her eyes widened when she realized it was a reply to a message she'd sent. A message she had no recollection of typing out. She took a bracing breath before reading through it.

Mermista 02:43AM:

Hey it's Mermista:) the girl who hit you witg her car last friday sorry if this is like super weird but do you wanna get dinner or coffee or lunch or sonething whete i pretend to not laugh at your jokes while you talk my ear off???? I promuse im not gonna run you ovrr ever again. I just don't know many guys who can pop their own shoulder back in amd make a joke a while doing it. PS U R very cute;)

Sea Hawk 02:44AM :

Hello Mermista. Yes, I ABSOLUTELY want to go on a date with you. Are you free Thursday evening?

Mortified, she closed her phone and slid it across the counter. First of all, if Mermista was going to contact this guy about anything, it should've been about his shoulder and impending medical bill. Not about some date her drunk self desperately seemed to want to go on. Secondly, who in their right mind would say yes to a date with the person who ran them over? And in response to a text like THAT, too.

She sighed. Thinking it over for maybe ten seconds.

Guess she had a date on Thursday.

End Notes

I'm the kind of person who see's a single screenshot and creates an entire universe based off of it, so this was a lot of fun.

Also, I dislocated my shoulder back in highschool when I still did gymwheel so this hit close to home.
