Life for Catra had not come easy since the end of the war. Especially now that instead of being at war with Bright Moon, she and many others were part of the healing process. This was foreign territory for her. She hadn't grown up in this type of environment. She had only ever been tasked to make strategies for destruction, not aid and recovery. But thankfully Adora, her Adora, had stepped up to the task of helping her through it.

Catra could hardly believe this moment was truly happening. Her and Adora, living their lives together, not as adversaries, but as romantic partners. As weird as it felt to her, she was learning to try and enjoy it more and more. She knew she loved Adora more than anything, and Adora returned that love a thousand fold. But in the back of her mind she always seemed to feel a seed of doubt that seemed to sprout ever so slowly, filling her with a sense that everything happening was simply too good to be true.

Catra slowly opened her eyes to see the pink sheets that were spread out over her and Adora's bed. She slowly shifted her weight onto her arms as she sat up, noticing that her girlfriend was absent from her side of the bed. With quick glances she surveyed the room, and her ears flicked at the faint sound of the shower turning on. Relieved, Catra slid her feet off the bed and rested them on the floor, stretching her arms as soft cracks began to ring out from her joints. Her gaze shifted to the door where the sound of running water came from, only to spot Adora's old red Horde jacket and the rest of her outfit spread out on the floor nearby. As she stood up and walked through the room, the cold air from the opened door that led out into the balcony hit her half naked body. She shivered at the breeze, but began to make her way towards the empty resting Horde jacket.

Catra lifted the jacket in front of her, noticing the patches and long mended tears from their old hostile encounters. This unknowingly made her smile, but she also held a sense of regret knowing that she had made those awful decisions back then. With that thought, her facial expression changed to one not of sadness, but determination.

'This type of behavior will never happen again.' Catra thought to herself. 'I will never hurt my friends or loved ones, ever again .'

She made her way back towards their bed, still holding the red jacket in her hands. The scent of Adora filled her nostrils, a sense of soothing peace immediately washing over her. Adora had always had this type of effect on Catra, as just being around this beautiful woman calmed her in such a way that she couldn't even put into words. It even got to a point where it was easier for her to accept things like physical contact from her other friends, and she even loved to receive hugs from her now bestfriend Scorpia. But Adora? She was the only person Catra had ever gotten physically intimate with. And with that closeness, that bond, she had entrusted Adora with the highest level of trust a person like herself could give.

Catra sat on her side of the bed as she slowly started to wrap the red garment around her body. Her nose gently placed itself on the collar of Adora’s favorite piece of clothing, and as she breathed in it was as if the world stood still. She felt as if could sit here for years and never have to be afraid of anything ever again. She pulled it even closer to her, her mind filling with memories of her and Adora after the war. The many evenings they spent sitting under a tree and watching the sun set in the distance. Laying on the grass, tangled so very close together as they watched the stars and talked about anything and everything. Those moments where they said they loved each other, over and over again as if the world would end if they didn't keep saying it. These types of memories were what kept Catra together at the end of the day, and made her feel like she was a part of something greater. Adora made her feel as if she was safe, secure, and most of all loved beyond anything. Catra was forever thankful to be spending her life with the person who had fought through hell and back to ensure they would never be apart again. This amazing and beautiful woman had proven to her that she didn’t need to be alone or afraid, but could change her ways and finally truly be loved. The memories rushing throughout her head started to elicit a low rumble in her chest, and sure enough; she was purring. Her tail wrapped around her body, as if to form herself into a cocoon with the jacket that her love always wore.

Her low rumble had now morphed into a loud and vocal purr, as a wide smile crossed her face. For the first time in her life, she could finally admit to herself that she was happy. She chuckled at the fact that she, Catra of all people, finally found what she desperately wanted in life. She never thought she would find anything close to what she had right now. Catra knew however that it was important for her to remember the hurt she had caused, not to torment herself, but to remind herself that she was capable of becoming the better person she strived to be.

Catra became so enveloped in her own mind, she didn't hear the door to the bathroom open. Adora walked into the room, dressed in a new white top and tan colored pants. Her grayish blue eyes slowly drifted over to her bed, until she spotted the brown, tightly cloaked feline.

"Is- Is that my Jacket?" Adora asked, her face now fully engulfed in a reddish hue.

Catra, who was completely caught up in her own universe, practically jumped up into the air with a small shriek. Her tail immediately puffed up to its bushiest state.

"N-No! T.. This isn't what it looks like!" she said in a scrambled mess of words. Catra's face now filled with a similar shade of red, only darker.

Adora couldn’t look away, awestruck by the sheer amazement of seeing her girlfriend wrapped up in her favorite jacket. The sight set her heart ablaze.

"So you weren't wearing my jacket?" Adora blinked, her lovestruck expression being traded for a smug one. She walked over to their bed, sitting next to the now very embarrassed Catra. "Y'know, you could've just asked to wear it and I would've let you silly." Adora said, with a little chuckle mixed in.

Catra, whose ears were now down as she wrapped her tail around her leg, tried her best to look up at the woman who had just caught her red-handed. "It... It makes me feel safe to have it around me..." Catra admitted, further fueling her embarrassment.

"You do know I was right there in the bathroom, you could've just come to me if you wanted to. I wouldn't have minded one bit having you with me." Adora said in response.

"IT'S NOT LIKE THAT-" Catra stated loudly before returning to a normal speaking level."It... you make me feel safe, this jacket… makes me feel safe..."

Adora turned to look at her with a smile as a renewed blush filled her cheeks.

Catra made a gesture to hand back the jacket, but before she could, Adora gently pulled her closer to her. While it caught Catra by surprise, she wasn't about to complain as she quickly latched onto her partner in a swift embrace. Adora smile ever so softly as she grabbed her red jacket and gently placed it around both of them. As if wearing the jacket wasn't enough, Catra now had the one familiar scent that put her entire mind at ease joined in with her. It was as if in that moment, everything in all of Etheria stopped. Her body full of warmth and love, a roaring purr erupted from her as she rested her head on Adora's shoulder. If there was one thing that came out of Prime's defeat that Catra loved the most, it was moments like this. Moment's where she could stop and remember that she was not only safe and at home, but also extremely loved by those around her. Adora slowly and gently began to move the two towards their bed, making sure to be as soft as possible. When the two eventually reached the bed, Catra shifted herself to rest further into Adora, her tail quickly wrapping around her leg to close as little distance between them as possible.

"I love you… so much.” Adora said peacefully as she rested her chin on top of Catra's head, nestling into her unkempt hair.

"I love you more than you could ever know…Dummy." Catra responded in kind, her loud purr more thundering than ever. Soon enough, the two began to fall asleep as they nestled into one another, wrapped... in a red jacket.

End Notes

I just wanna give a huge thank you to the people working over on the JBTS fic, if you haven't seen it already go check it out here: https://archiveofourown.org/works/44640118

Altecfenix, Lyssandia, and Pixiepepistar, you guys are amazing and you were very instrumental in the making of this fic, as this is my very first one!

I hope everyone enjoys, I might try and give writing some more fan fics a shot down the line!

6/25/2023 - Thank you so much to both Lyssandia for giving me the money to get a commissioned piece of art and Swati for drawing it! <3

If you haven't already, please go check out swati's twitter! They have commissions open at the moment and are very easy to get some art from. :)
