Come Running Home To You

by ScorchFlame

Summary

Catra and Adora's time returning magic to the universe traveling long stretches from planet to planet taught them both to take things slow, to rest, to breathe. It took some time, but they both found that they liked it. Being present in the moment, not thinking too hard about what was needed of them next, not constantly looking for things to keep them busy. Life on its own was it’s own sort of busy.

Adora hummed to herself as she walked towards her cottage nestled comfortably in the middle of the Whispering Woods. Her and Catra had lived in Bright Moon for a time, Glimmer more than happy to let them stay for as long as they wanted. But in the end, her and her wife decided that as long as they liked meant just long enough to build a home for themselves. Their time returning magic to the universe traveling long stretches from planet to planet taught them both to take things slow, to rest, to breathe. It took some time, but they both found that they liked it. Being present in the moment, not thinking too hard about what was needed of them next, not constantly looking for things to keep them busy. Life on its own was it's own sort of busy.

While Adora had not fully retired She-ra, she had definitely taken a more hands off approach. That had been an interesting conversation with the rest of the princesses.

"Eight or higher." Catra said firmly, slapping a clawed hand on the war table.

Mermista frowned. "What are you even talking about?"

Perfuma smiled, knowing exactly what Adora and Catra were getting at. She was proud of them for finally putting up reasonable boundaries. Taking care of themselves, and each other.

"Just what she said," Adora added. "Eight or higher. If you need She-ra, the emergency had better be an eight or higher."

Entrapta looked up from her tablet with an inquisitive expression. "What's the scale?"

Catra sighed. "One to ten. One being there's a cat stuck in a tree," she shot Bow a death glare when he giggled at the example, "and a ten being something crazy like Horde Prime 2.0 come back for revenge. If it's something the rest of you can handle without us, then handle it without us."

The room erupted in a cacophony of sound. Questions, concerns, shock, outrage, the shouts ran the gamut of emotion and reaction that one could expect from such a mandate.

Adora looked down at Catra with a soft smile, squeezing the hand she held when that same smile was returned. They had expected this sort of reaction, but even still. They were confident in their decision. "This doesn't mean we're just gonna disappear either. We'll still visit, come to parties, have sleepovers. We just. We think we need some time to ourselves." Her blue gaze flitted over to Glimmer that hadn't uttered a word as of yet, sitting silently in Angella's old high backed chair. "Can you understand where we're coming from?"

Violet eyes rested at a fixed point at the center of the table while she considered. Then slowly, nodded her head before looking at her friends. A small sad smile took up residence on her face. "Of course. What can we do to help?"

So here she was, coming home with food from the market.

With a wide grin, she shouldered open the rickety door. "Catra!" She called, "I'm home!"

"In here, dummy!" Echoed the raspy voice from their bedroom.

Adora felt her heart soften as the affectionate pet name and set the sack of food down on the counter in the kitchen. She sorted through it for a moment before pulling out a pastry and bottle of juice from the bag and walking into their bedroom. "How are my two favorite people?" She beamed.

Catra sighed heavily, a hand rubbing along her overly round stomach. "They're kicking up a storm, and I would very much like for them to stop." She leaned into the kiss her wife pressed to her cheek, resting against Adora's side when she sat on the bed beside her.

The blonde offered her the food and drink, using her now free hand to lovingly greet her child. “Hey Finn,” she said softly, leaning down to press an ear to Catra’s swollen belly. “How are you today, buddy?” She grinned widely when she was greeted by a series of kicks. “I love you too, Finn,” she crooned, gently kissing where she felt the kicks.

“Don’t encourage them,” Catra chuckled before nibbling on her fruit pastry. “Fuck, this is good.”

“It was the last one,” Adora said from her reclined position, not ready to leave her kitten just yet. “I had to fight someone for it.”

Catra threw back her head in that wonderful high pitched laugh of her’s. “That poor bastard,” she hissed between her fits of laughter. “Well, I hope you didn’t traumatize them too much.”

Adora hummed, closing her eyes listening intently for any sound coming from her baby. She still couldn’t believe it. Her baby. Her kitten. It was the most amazing thing. Adora still thought fondly of the day they learned Catra was pregnant.

They went to Razz two years ago with the assurance that it would work, but it would take time. They weren't exactly sure how She-ra’s magic worked in conjunction with the spell, regardless. They trusted Madame Razz despite how batty she seemed at times.

Catra sighed, Adora’s arm wrapped securely around her middle as they laid on their sides in bed. A soft smile pulled at the corner of the magicat’s mouth at the sound of Adora’s gentle snoring. She brought her wife’s hand to her lips to press a series of kisses along her knuckles before carefully dislodging herself from the embrace.

She made her way to the bathroom to splash water on her face before taking the test Razz had given them.

Adora's nose wrinkled, hand absently feeling around the bed for the warmth she'd grown accustomed to through the night. She grumbled in irritation, grabbing Catra's pillow and hugging that to her chest instead. The blonde let out a deep contented sigh, burying her face into the fabric that had the strong scent of her wife.

"Adora!" Came a shout from the other room.

She shot up out of bed, suddenly very awake. She immediately reached for She-ra fearing something was wrong, transforming mid stride as she ran to find her wife. "Catra! What's the matter?! What's wrong?!" She blinked down at her wife, puzzled by the tears standing in her heterochromic eyes. "C-Catra?"

"Adora," she whispered holding up the test, the result clear as day.

She sucked in a shaking breath. It was too good to be true. "Does… does that mean you're…?" She-ra's magic drained from Adora's body as she waited.

"I'm pregnant," Catra answered with tear soaked laughter.

"You're pregnant," Adora whispered, the words slowly processing before a wide grin split her face. "You're pregnant!" She shouted wrapping her arms around her wife, peppering her face with kisses as she spun her.

"We're gonna have a baby…"

Adora pressed her lips to Catra's middle one more time before properly crawling into bed beside her wife, hugging Catra tightly to her side. "It should be any day now, right?"

"That's what the midwife said. I feel like an over inflated balloon," she sighed. "I'm so done being pregnant." Despite her complaining, she lovingly traced her hands over her round belly.

“You that excited to meet them?”

Catra smiled, closing her eyes, a low rolling purr reverberating through her being. “I really am.” She stared affectionately at her stomach. “I already love you so much Finn.”

“Me too,” Adora whispered, pressing a hand right along Catra’s. “I love you, Finn.”

“We love you so much.”

End Notes

I was feeling a lot of feelings on this day of mothers and birth givers. I guess I just had a lot of maternal love to give and I needed it to go somewhere. So I'm happy projecting a bit. I might add another equally small chapter later. Who knows.

I'm still working on Let Me Be The Place That You Hide, don't worry. I'm excited for that next chapter coming up.
