It wasn't often that Catra saw Adora get annoyed after the war. Despite her issues with relaxing, she still managed to find time to relax and take care of herself. But there would always be the one time that something would just completely push her over the edge. Such as today, right after the morning meeting of the Alliance.

Catra had been out that morning with Melog, so she hadn't been at the meeting with Adora, but she was already back in her room when Adora entered. And Adora didn't look happy. Her face was red and fuming with rage. The moment she made it to the bed, she flopped onto it, grabbed a pillow and buried her face into it.

"Adora?" Catra asked.

Adora didn't respond, just let out a muffled scream that sounded like it came from the depths of hell itself. The screaming went on and on, the same note as Adora let out all of her emotions into the pillow. Catra just raised her eyebrow the longer Adora screamed, getting slowly concerned for her girlfriend.

"Adora, you know you'll have to breathe eventually, right?" she asked, half-jokingly.

Finally, Adora took her head out of the pillow, gasping and sucking in air, before flopping down onto her back with her arms and legs spread out. "Meetings can be a real pain in the ass."

"No shit She-lock," Catra snarked. "I take it the meeting didn't go well?"

"Oh it was going just fine until General "helmet is on way too tight" Juliet opened her big fat mouth!" Adora groaned.

Catra knew Adora hadn't meant that. She usually got on very well with Juliet, having fought at her side many times and considered her a friend. But clearly, Juliet had said something that had pushed Adora's buttons. Catra hopped onto the bed next to Adora and stroked her hair.

"What did she say?"

Adora sat up. "She… made a suggestion. That perhaps now with the magic of Etheria free, I could use my She-Ra powers to reactivate some of the old First One's tech we've been digging up lately. She thought maybe there might be something that could speed up the rebuilding work we've been doing, like some kind of giant mech that could help carry stuff or something."

"Or some other kind of doomsday weapon that could blow us all to kingdom come even worse than the one you nearly died to shut down," Catra remarked. "That's… just so stupid of them!"

"I know! And she usually knows better! But for some stupid ass reason, she suggested it!"

Catra groaned. She of all people knew the dangers of tampering with forces that weren't fully understood, especially First One's tech. "That's just a disaster waiting to happen!"

"Oh, it'll be a disaster alright! First, I'll probably get up there and do my She-Ra thing, things will work probably okay at first… and then somehow, a giant monster's gonna come out of nowhere and beat the crap out of us because hey guess what, we can't walk five miles on this planet without something horrible monster or magical doomsday relic trying to kill us!"

"Oh tell me about it!"

"And then they'll be all like 'Adora help us! We really screwed the pooch here!' and I'll jump in to save them because hey, I'm a hero, it's what I do and I'll beat the monster and then they'll try and blame me because I released the stupid thing, despite the whole stupid thing being their idea and then I'll probably punch them or something!" She punched the air. "And then Glimmer's gonna-"

It was then that Adora's rant was broken by the sound of Catra laughing her head off, rolling around on the bed. It was that high-pitched, squeaky laugh that Adora couldn't help but love whenever she heard… only now she just felt embarrassed. Her face turned a bright red and she looked away.

"W-What?"

Catra sat up. "Sorry, it's just… you're so cute when you're mad. Plus I dunno the thought of you punching those asshats makes me laugh."

"Not helping," Adora grumbled, covering her mouth.

Her girlfriend just laughed more and as much as she was trying to resist the urge, Adora found herself smiling and giggling too. "Okay, maybe it's helping a little bit… still annoyed though."

"Look, here's an idea, why don't we bring Lonnie, Kyle and Rogelio with us and if we end up shit creek without a paddle, we can just blame Kyle for old time's sake!"

"You know we promised Kyle we'd treat him better after we made up with those three."

"I was teasing you, dummy," Catra said, rolling her eyes. "Fine, better idea, we do the whole thing and when the monster comes out, we beat it up and tell that stupid Juliet lady that we told her so and from now on, Entrapta's in charge of all this tech crap like she should be."

"That… actually sounds reasonable," Adora accepted. "But can I still punch her? Because I feel like she'd deserve it still in that situation."

"No, but if she pulls this stunt again, you can let the monster chase her around a bit… and then throw her into a hole or something. Just say it was her for her own protection or something like that."

Adora giggled at the thought of that. "You are an evil woman, you know that, Catra?"

"Even when I'm good, I'm still bad," her girlfriend remarked, shooting a toothy grin at her. "Now do you feel better?"

"A lot better," Adora replied, before pulling Catra close and kissing her deeply. Her arms wrapped around the woman of her dreams as they kissed and held one another, Catra clinging on tightly as she felt Adora's lips press hard against her own. She could tell how much better she was feeling.

As Adora broke the kiss, she grinned. "You know, I guess if we did run into any giant monsters, I guess it wouldn't be too bad if I was fighting them with my girlfriend."

"And I bet you'd love any excuse to chuck someone into a hole for the fun of it," Catra teased.

"... that too," Adora admitted, chuckling.

Just then, the two of them heard the sound of a knock on the door. "Adora, are you in there?" A voice asked.

"Yeah, I'm here," Adora responded, as the door opened.

In walked General Juliet, who had a slightly regretful look on her face. Catra just sat back, watching the whole scene play out of before. As the general approached the bed, she stood to attention.

"Adora, I came to apologise for what happened at the meeting earlier," the General expressed. "I didn't exactly consider my words when I made my suggestion about salvaging the First One's tech. I know what I said was out of line and I hope you can forgive me. You have been in contact with a lot more of that technology than I have, so I should have deferred to your judgment on the matter."

Adora got up, smiling. "It's water under the bridge, Juliet. You were just wanting to figure out ways of speeding up the rebuilding. But in future, just let me worry about the First One's tech. We already have enough on our hands."

“So you… accept my apology?”

“I’m a very easily forgiving person,” Adora replied.

Juliet nodded. “Very well… if you’ll excuse me, ladies, I shall return to my duties.”

As she left the room, Catra frowned a little. “Aw, that sucks.”

“Why?”

“I’m pretty sure we’re kicking her into a hole anymore.”

Adora chuckled. “Look, if it makes you feel better, we’ll find someone else to throw into a hole. We can make it a really deep one too.”

“You really know how to make a girl swoon, don’t you,” Catra replied, grinning before Adora kissed her again.
