"Our people is being delivered for the prisoner exchange. Keep double guards on the ambassador."

"Yes, Baroness."

"The Joes are bound to try something, so stay vigilant until the exchange is over and we are in the transport on our way out."

"Yes, Baroness."

"Where's the brat?"

The uniformed Cobra viper nodded towards the hotel door he guarded. "Locked in here, Baroness."

The tall woman, still dressed in the rich, red gown she had worn during the ball when their little kidnapping operation had taken place, frowned.

"You don't have eyes on her?"

"It hardly felt necessary, Baroness," the viper said, keeping his expression carefully neutral.

"Never underestimate the resourcefulness of a child," Baroness scolded him "They ARE the future after all. Now open the door."

"Yes, Baroness," the viper said unlocked the door, opened it and crashed backwards as a hotel tea trolley, loaded with books to make it heavier, hit him in the stomach and sent him flying. Baroness neatly sidestepped him and grabbed the pink haired teenager who was making a dash for it in the arm in an iron grip.

"Not so fast, little miss Moon," she hissed and steered the protesting child into the room again, without as much as a glance at the whimpering viper. She closed the door behind them and let go of the child, who glared at her with murder in her eyes.

"I have good news and bad news for you, miss Moon," Baroness said with casual voice as the child grabbed a table leg an lounged at her. She caught the girl's arm again and forced her to drop it. "Why don't you sit down so we can have a little discussion in peace."

"In peace?" the girl spat. "You KIDNAPPED me. Where is my mom?"

"In the next room over," Baroness shrugged. "We just finished our little chat. She was MOST forthcoming with details on the diplomat network."

The girl clenched her fists so her knuckled whitened.

"If you have hurt my mom I will.."

"Yes, yes, I'm sure," Baroness said with bored voice. "But don't you worry your pretty little head. Once I threatened to kill you, she told me everything I wanted to know."

"FIEEEEEEEND!" the girl snarled and attacked again. Baroness grabbed her and pressed her down in a chair.

"Such passion," she chuckled. "But misplaced. You need to be smarter, little girl, or you will easily be outmanoeuvred.

"I'm not a little girl," the girl protested and struggled to get up again. "I'm nearly fifteen."

"Oh!" Baroness mockingly answered. "Practically a grown woman then. And still you let us capture you as easily as a little lamb led to slaughter."

"You took me by surprise."

"You LET us take you by surprise. Now sit down before I make you."

The girl glared at her.

"Just try it."

"Don't think I couldn't." Baroness smirked and held up a little perfume bottle so that the girl got a good look at it. "One whiff of this, and you will follow my every whim."

The girl blinked.

"What? Really?"

"Really. The human mind is much more malleable than most people think, and so easily controllable." Baroness put down the bottle on the end table by the bed and sat down next to the girl, who suddenly stopped struggling.

"I am called Baroness. I'm in charge of this operation. And you, miss Moon, what's your name?"

"Glimmer," the girl swallowed, glancing at the bottle.

"Ah, yes," Baroness said with a smile. "Glimmer. A beautiful name. You know, you do remind me of your father."

"You... knew my father?" Glimmer said, suddenly uncertain.

"Oh yes I did. We had a... close working relationship for a while."

"My father disappeared when I was just a child," Glimmer whispered.

"Did he now?"

Glimmer stared at her, heart beating.

"Do you know what happened to him."

"As I said, I have good news and bad news for your, Glimmer, Baroness said, ignoring the question. "The good news are - you and your softhearted mother will soon be back to tea and crumpets at the embassy - that is, IF the Joes return our people as promised in exchange."

"And the bad news?" Glimmer asked, pushing her chair a few inches backwards.

"That in all likelihood the Joes will attempt an ill conceived rescue attempt. And when that happens, I will shoot you dead." Baroness mimed firing a pistol at the girl's head. "Probably your mother too," she added after a few moments of thought.

"How does that help you get your people back," Glimmer protested, trying not to show that the threat scared her. Baroness smiled at her.

"Perhaps then, next time we take a hostage the Joes will think twice before launching an ill conceived rescue attempt."

"Perhaps... or I do... THIS!" Glimmer rushed up from her chair, ducked under Baroness arm and snatched up the perfume bottle. She spun around, and before Baroness could grab her sprayed her capturer in the face.

Baroness, who just had been about to grab the girl again, stopped in her tracks. She blinked sluggishly as if trying to regain a lost train of thought. Seemingly acting from muscle memory, she took off her glasses and started to clean them.

"Do... do I know you?" she said to the crouching teenager in front of her.

"You... don't remember me?" Glimmer whispered.

"It seems like I... trust you?" Baroness said. "That I should... obey you?"

"Yes!" Glimmer whispered, staring at the perfume bottle in her hand, heart beating. Baroness knelt down in front of her.

"What is your command, master?"

"You really will obey me?"

"Whatever you say, so shall be done..."

Glimmer stared at her for another moment, than pumped a fist in the air in absolute triumph. "TAKE THAT!"

"Take what, master?"

"No, I mean... um, get up, tell the guards outside that you will escort me and mom out of the hotel... no, better yet, tell one guard to come in, and we spray him, and then tell another to come in and then we spray him and..."

"That's your plan, is it?" Baroness said as she stood up with a grin. "Not bad for the spur of the moment."

"Hey... um, stop!" Glimmer said and took a step backwards. "I command you."

"Ah, yes, command!" Baroness said and took the perfume bottle from Glimmer. "Total control of another human. Their free will wiped away, replaced with only obedience. Intoxicating isn't it? And you took to it right away. You have potential, Glimmer."

"You... you lied," Glimmer whispered, backing until her back was against the wall.

"I did," Baroness confirmed with a cruel smirk. "Well, partly. THIS is just water. But this..." she picked up another bottle from her purse and made sure Glimmer got a good look of it. "This is the real deal. Perhaps I should give you a little whiff, hmmm?"

"What... what do you want?" Glimmer whispered.

"Nothing much," Baroness shrugged. "I had a few minutes to kill and felt you might be interesting company. I wasn't wrong."

Glimmer gave her a betrayed look.

"Did you lie about the prisoner exchange too?"

"Oh no, that was quite real," Baroness said. "Our people should be here at any moment. In fact..." She took a phone from the purse and quickly pressed a few buttons.

"Hello, so pleasant to talk to you again," she said to the person on the other end of the call. "I just wanted you to know that little miss Moon is still alive and will remain so IF our people is delivered timely as promised. See for yourself." She held up the camera towards Glimmer.

"There's three of them outside this door, and at least five more somewhere else in the building!" Glimmer quickly shouted to the uniformed person on the screen. "Baroness has some kind of mind control perfume and..."

"They already know that," Baroness laughed and ended the call. "But well done nevertheless. You show promise indeed."

"I will..."

"No you won't," Baroness interrupted her. "Not today. Today you are just a pawn. But tomorrow... who knows." She reached out and touched Glimmer's hair. For a moment Glimmer simply stared at her at the intimate gesture, then she remembered herself and forcefully pulled her head away.

"Such a pretty little thing," Baroness sighed. "Such a pretty trophy daughter. And future trophy wife. Perhaps even some trophy figurehead for this or that meaningless little organisation at some point. Your life will be full of people telling you what to do, Glimmer. Full of people using you but never, ever letting you close to real power. Such a shame."

"You... you don't know that," Glimmer spat, staring transfixed into Baroness eyes, her own eyes huge and her face slightly flustered.

"Don't I?" Baroness said with dry voice. "Well, perhaps I don't. Perhaps you will be different. Perhaps you will be one of the rare few who take power for yourself and refuse to be herded."

"Like... you?" Glimmer whispered.

Baroness didn't answer, but for just a moment she arched an eyebrow ever so slightly.

"Now, let's go and get this prisoner exchange over with," she said in businesslike voice, the moment over. "And just to be clear, if you do something foolish I WILL hurt your mom. Be smart, keep your head down and bide your time. Who knows, one day you might be in a position to take a shot at me, but it won't be today."

"What about my father?" Glimmer quickly asked as Baroness walked towards the door. "Did you lie about him too?"

Baroness half turned to the girl and winked at her.

"Why don't you ask your bodyguards. The Joes know perfectly well what happened to your father. I can't imagine why they'd chose to keep it from you for all these years."
