Dinner.

by Praxiteles

Summary

Shadow Weaver would definitely be rolling in her grave if she knew.

Notes

I wrote this sitting in my own kitchen. it's freezing fucking cold but that's by choice. its summer semester so my dorm is empty and I can keep the apartment at any temp I want.

anyway I hope ya'll enjoy.

See the end of the work for more notes

The air conditioner hasn't worked since they moved in, neither has the water heater. Catra complains but Adora knows the feline loves it here. She knows because of the way Catra will sit in the living room just because she can. Even though there's no tv.

She knows because Catra will walk leisurely in the kitchen and grab a snack, eating it slowly and savoring it right there next to the fridge.

She knows because Catra will walk heavy footed into the house, stomping around like she has snow stuck to her shoes and she just can't seem to get it off.

She knows because Catra will speak in spanish. Loud and unrestrained, yelling to Adora through the house and talking to herself as she makes lunch or breakfast or dinner.

She knows because of the way Catra will stop Adora in the middle of the hallway, or living room, or kitchen, or bathroom and kiss her like she’s drowning. Shove her gently up against the wall and trail light nibbles down her neck.

Adora smiles and turns the music of her speaker up. Right there in the middle of the kitchen so the whole empty house can hear.

The kitchen is cold, freezing really, but Adora doesn't mind. She pulls on Catra’s thick hoodie and gets to work.

Adora places two saucepans of water on the stove top. The stove top they use whenever they want and as frequently as they want.

She pulls the chili peppers from where she’s hidden them in the back of their fridge. Their fridge. Adora and Catra’s that has the vitamin water Catra likes, even though Adora heard they have roach wings in them, And the protein shakes Adora likes, even though Catra swears they’re more milkshake then protein.

Adora rips the green stems from the chilis. Leaving them on the counter, messy and out of order. She feeds the chilis into the boiling water. Throwing the chipotle peppers on top.

She coughs a little as the steam rises from the pot makes her eyes water. She brings it down to a simmer.

She rinses the tomato, peels the garlic. She dances, swinging around the kitchen and making a racket.

She throws the simmering chili peppers, oregano, whole black pepper, ground cumin and salt into the loud blender they had bought on their first shopping trip in the new house.

The one Catra had picked up with glee and smiled so mischievously at Adora it's like the feline thought Shadow Weaver would hear it from hell and roll in her grave. Adora smiles and turns that shit on, blending the mixture for longer than necessary just because it's something Catra would do.

She mixes in her vinegar, leaving the bottle out and open on the counter. Letting its sharp smell cut through the heat of the peppers.

She lines her pot with oil and pours the chili paste in, letting the mixture warm and simmer; she coughs as she pulls the beef from the fridge in the garage. The fridge Catra had bought with total glee, claiming it was absolutely necessary that they had two fridges,

She slaps the beef onto the counter with a smile. It's exactly the kind of meat Catra never got to eat. The kind Shadow weaver called disgusting. The kind Catra eats so often now that she has to be getting sick of it.

The meat gets cut into smaller pieces and seasoned with salt. Adora opens the windows before she dies of a coughing fit. And then opens it wider when she can almost hear Shadow weaver yelling at her to ‘close that window’

Once the windows are cracked she can't stop herself from propping the back door open with a rock for good measure, letting the outside air in.

She submerges the beef in the chili, closing the lid to let it simmer.

She sits down at the kitchen table with her laptop and notebook. With the book she's writing that Shadow Weaver would never approve of. The old hag would scream if she knew Adora had dropped the med track and switched to english.

She'd die on the spot if she knew Catra and Adora were dating all through college. That Catra had supported her decision to switch to English wholeheartedly. That she and Catra saved every penny and scrap of change to buy this house and fix it from the dump it was to the home it is now.

Adora likes to think her dead body would melt like the wicked witch of the west if she found out that Adora not only published her book, but that it was so popular it made it to the best seller list.

And then her melted remains would shrivel and turn to dust when she found out it was a romance. A sapphic romance. Adora smiles at the thought.

Catra gets home when Adora starts to skim the fatty oil off the top of the chili mixture. She opens the door loudly, the handle jiggling and her feet stomping like she's trying to kill a bug.

Adora smiles as she hears a backpack thump into the floor, left right there in the entrance.

"Mi corazón! Dónde está!" Catra shouts, stomping around in the hallway. "te necesito en mis brazos como hace diez segundos"

"In the kitchen!" Adora shouts back, pulling the beef from the pot. Catra takes one step into the living room and takes a deep breath. Adora watches a smile creep on her face, a canine peaking over her lip.

“ay mi amor, mi todo, mi vida, eres muy bueno conmigo” Catra comes up from behind Adora as she shreds the beef and wraps her arms around the blond's middle. Adora giggles as Catra rubs her cheek into her neck.

“I'm going to cut off a finger if you keep doing that” Catra responds with a rumbling purr that vibrates through Adora’s back and right to her heart. She takes the knife from Adora's hand and places it on the counter.

Catra spins Adora around and leans on her tippy toes for a kiss. Adora smiles and presses her mouth into Catra’s. She tries to pull away but Catra keeps her in place by grabbing the lapels of her hoodie.

Adora giggles and deepens the kiss, resting her arms over Catra’s shoulders. The feline pushes her into the counter and smooths her hands down Adora’s front to wrap around the blond’s waist.

Catra breaks the kiss and rubs the apple of her cheek along Adora’s face. “How will I ever repay you for making me such a delicious dinner?”

“I don't know..” Adora says lowly, knocking her nose into Catra’s, “maybe you could…” she leans in, stopping centimeters from Catra’s lips, “...do the dishes,” Catra pulls away, rolling her eyes with a smile, “ay dios mío” she mutters, “is this my jacket?”. Adora giggles and pulls her in for that kiss.

Shadow Weaver would definitely be rolling in her grave if she knew.
