Heavens forbid you ever use your tongue against me for it will be cut and I will do so myself. Heavens forbid if you ever use your claws to lash at me for I will declaw you myself. Heavens forbid Heavens forbid Heavens forbid.

Days blurred together, each minute with shadow weaver turned agonizing, not a second wasted without the horde hearing her screams. Shadows twisted her head, lightning marks her arms, whispers caressed her soul, embracing her heart before threatening to crush it. Catra did not know how long it had been since she was captured but she knew if she stayed even a day too long, her fragile being would collapse on itself.

Some days she would envision what she'd do in Brightmoon if she hadn't been captured. She'd reminisce days spent with Arrow boy and Sparkles, laugh to herself on their theatrical antics, yearn for her friends and their quick snarks, feel nostalgic over lost conversations and easy battles. She'd mourn over the loss of her innocent self, how naive she had been to ever think they could win the war. Hope was impossible to feel, happiness lingered miles away and peace seemed as if it had never existed.

The door of the prison cell creaked open, alerting Catra of a new presence. Her ears pinned back on instinct and her tail curled itself around her, as if to shield her body from any more cruelties.

"I heard you were being uncooperative." Came the voice of her best- former best friend. (lover?) Her enemy her enemy her enemy, a voice seemed to chant.

Catra let the cold floors of the stone cell cool her body, a sensation she grasped onto, fighting the panic burning at her throat.

“I won't betray my friends.” She thought she said it in defiance but her words stumbled, her voice weakened, her resolve was crumbling.

“We used to be friends once upon a time.” Adora chuckled.

“Friends don't kidnap each other.”

“Didn’t yours kidnap you too?”

“Atleast they didn’t torture me.”

“Fair enough,” Adora conceded, “but you know we need information Catra. Information you aren't giving.”

Catra scoffed. “You don’t deserve to be given anything. Go to hell for all I care.” She threw her words, careless of how it landed, forgetting for a moment, the woman before her was not the same girl who protected her from shadows and other cruel forms.

Adora laughed lightly, clapping her hands in a small applause while walking forward until her feet were merely a few centimeters away from Catra’s face. She knelt down, smiling softly at her, memories of two young girls in corridors, shared rations, slight touches, whispered promises, stolen kisses all racing through Catra's mind and her breath hitched at Adora's close proximity. She could kiss her right there, she could feel her right there, she could touch her right there and all would be well, all would be good all would be right and -

A hand grasped her chin tightly forcing Catra's to look upwards, crying out as tender wounds became more bruised, as soft memories vanished and Adora's anger filled her vision.

"I don't like this new attitude of yours Catra," Adora said, her voice barely hiding the rage underneath, "I asked you once and I'll ask again, what is that god forbidden rebellion of yours planning." She tightened her grip, her jaw threatening to get crushed under her strength.

"I told you once and I will tell you again," Catra began mockingly, "I will never fucking tell you jackshit." She spat out, hands holding Adora's wrist, claws cutting through delicate skin.

It seemed that she forgot once again, the woman standing before her was not the protector she envisioned her once to be.

A sharp sting graced her cheek, pushing Catra's head to the side before a hand grabbed her throat, lifting her up from the pathetic position she was in on the floor. Adora slammed her back on the wall, the stones grazing her skin, burning through the wounds shadows had inflicted on her, blood seeping through her dirty rags. Her vision blurred, her mind in a torrent of pain, her back was on fire- she could feel the whipped marks stretching- her chest could not get enough air her throat was burning- everything hurt everything hurt everything hurt her world was on fire and-

Mercifully the hand restricting her air supply loosened and Catra gasped, sucking in the blessing of cold air down her throat and she could breathe and she could breathe-

Her eyes focused on blue ones, storming with rage and anger and fury and a million other emotions she couldn't think of to name. Adora was frightening, Adora was terrifying, Adora was horrifying- and suddenly Catra's chest heaved once more, her lung aching for air, her heart was beating too fast for her mind to comprehend, her breaths came up short again but why why why her throat was free but she could not breathe why why why-

"I'll repeat this once and only once for you Catra," Adora whispered and her tone angry angry angry but her whispers bought moments of promises and dreams and love and soft touches and Adora-

Her head banged the stone wall bringing Catra to the present, wrenching her away from the safety of her memories, blood trickled down her neck.

"This defiance of yours is unnecessary," Adora murmured, her breaths caressing Catra's cheek, eyes welling up and tears were threatening to spill because Adora caressed her in so many other ways before-

“And I will crush you if you ever rebel against me again.” Adora continued, “I will not allow this attitude to continue, you are my prisoner and so help me if you ever forget that I am the horde lord. Heavens forbid you ever use your tongue against me for it will be cut and I will do so myself. Heavens forbid if you ever use your claws to lash at me for I will declaw you myself. Heavens forbid if you even look at me the wrong way I will blind you so that you may no longer even see- ”

And Catra sobbed, clutching the hand still firmly gripping her throat, praying wishing begging to be anywhere else but here, tears running hot on her cheeks, body heaving with every weep she gave, her eyes shut tight, her mind cracking.

The hand at her throat left, light touches brushed her tears away, soft fingers grazed her hair moving it away from her face, lips whispered upon her own.

“I will never give you the peace of death,” Her voice resembled a lover’s embrace, “I will never let you feel the mercy of sleep, not even the sanity of mind. For once you will stay, you will stay and you will never leave me again.”

Catra’s chest heaved, the sobs wracking her body, heart breaking with each breath she took. Every part of her screamed for relief, for release from the nightmare to die to die to die . The whispers, the pain, the echoes of memories-everything had become one endless, unbearable blur.

She closed her eyes, trying to shut out the world, but Adora's presence was so close, so inescapable. The soft brush of fingers against her skin, the gentle tilt of her chin—it was everything Catra had once longed for, and now it was everything she feared.

She sunk to the ground, curling up once more, tears staining the floors mixing with the blood dripping from her body. Adora knelt down, running her fingers through Catra's hair, lightly scratching the base of her ears like she had done oh so many times through nights where twisted shadows worked her mind and lightning scars graced her face.

"I'm only doing this for your own good, love," Adora whispered softly and Catra wept harder at the memory of the endearment, "It's going to be you and me against the world, just like we always planned. And heavens forbid if anyone will ever come in between that."

And Catra embraced the darkness she always feared.
