Ice of You to Drop In

by Lost_in_the_mycelium

Summary

Catra raises an eyebrow. “Growing up in the Horde was bad, but we never had to balance on knives in frigid temperatures for entertainment.”

Bow's smile dims.

“It is fun, you'll see,” Glimmer says, taking her boyfriend's hand. “It can be pretty romantic, too.”

Adora furrows her brow. “Because it's a near death experience?”

--

Just a short fluffy oneshot where Catra and Adora learn how to ice skate.

Notes

I needed some emergency fluff last night and AO3 was down?? So I wrote this basically stream of consciousness. I assure you we'll be back to plot and angst very soon, but in the mean time here is the fluffiest thing I think I have ever written. XD

See the end of the work for more notes

Adora regards the items in her best friends' hands with confusion.

“Weaponized shoes?” she guesses.

“Not interested,” Catra says. “My feet are deadly enough.”

“They're ice skates,” Bow explains excitedly. “You use them to glide across a frozen surface. It's fun!”

Catra raises an eyebrow. “Growing up in the Horde was bad, but we never had to balance on knives in frigid temperatures for entertainment.”

Bow's smile dims.

“It is fun, you'll see,” Glimmer says, taking her boyfriend's hand. “It can be pretty romantic, too.”

Adora furrows her brow. “Because it's a near death experience?”

“What? No!” Glimmer says. “Come with us to the ice skating rink in the Kingdom of Snows and we'll show you.”

Catra lights up. “Can we take the telepad?”

Glimmer's expression sours. The telepads are a touchy subject for her. One literally saved her life by getting her off of Prime's ship, and they simplify interplanetary travel immensely. But that doesn't stop her from going on impassioned rants about how they're unsustainable and “unnatural.”

The technology does require a lot of power to operate, and since the planets the intergalactic Horde used for mining have now been liberated, most of their precious metals are being used for local reconstruction efforts instead of being exported off world. This makes the materials needed to build new telepads harder to come by. As a result, most are either salvaged from Horde fleet ships or fashioned from recycled parts. They're never going to be a common mode of transportation, but they definitely have their uses.

Almost every kingdom on Etheria has one now. Glimmer is having a bit of an identity crisis about it, even if she pretends her concerns are about the use of resources. Catra thinks this is hilarious, and takes any opportunity to talk about how "smooth" and "comfortable" telepad travel is compared to "outdated" forms of teleportation. It's getting to the point where it sounds almost as suggestive as when Entrapta talks about tech.

"You know the telepad is only for important government business," Glimmer says through gritted teeth.

"Such as four high level officials transporting weapons to another kingdom?" Catra asks.

"For the last time, ice skates are not weapons!"

"I don't know, Sparkles. The way you're waving them around as you hiss at me seems awfully threatening."

Glimmer's smile takes on a menacing edge, similar to how Catra bears her fangs when she snarls. "Just get dressed in warm clothes and meet us outside."

She disappears with Bow in a flash of pink without waiting for a reply.

As the four of them behold the rink, Catra crosses her arms. "So, you just go around in circles? How is that fun?"

Adora nudges her with her shoulder. "Says the person who chases her own tail fun."

Catra's ears pin back. "I haven't done that since I was a kitten."

“I saw you do it last week,” Glimmer says.

“I was waking up from a nap and it surprised me!”

Once they're ready, Bow walks Catra and Adora through the basics of how to skate.

They both struggle, but Catra starts to get the hang of it first. She has a bit of an advantage when it comes to activities involving balance. Adora only manages a few strides at a time before she inevitably starts to wobble and has to grab onto either the railing or one of her friends, but she slowly gains confidence throughout the afternoon.

Her caution immediately goes out the window when Catra has the audacity to wink as she sails past. Adora's competitive nature can't let such a taunt go unanswered, and she throws all of her weight into launching herself from the safety of the railing and just hopes her center of gravity holds.

All of the practice seems to be paying off, because she's finally maintaining a forward momentum without falling. She gets why Bow and Glimmer likes this so much now. It reminds her a little of riding on Swift Wind—only this time she's flying through the air all on her own!

The high she experiences from this success is short-lived. The distance between her and Catra is rapidly closing and she realizes with a wave of panic that she doesn't know how to stop. Until now, she hasn't managed to skate far enough without losing her balance for it to matter.

She desperately tries to remember Bow's instructions. Is she supposed to point her toes in a V? Or was that to go faster?

Before she can figure it out, the two of them collide.

Catra winds up on her back with Adora splayed above her, staring down at her girlfriend's flushed face. She's not sure if the color is from the circumstances or the cold—or both—but she finds herself reaching up to trace the blooming pink shade with her thumb.

“Sorry,” Adora says softly. “I, um, forgot how to brake.”

“You're such an idiot,” Catra responds, but her voice is equally tender.

Tiny clouds form with each word, and Adora finds herself watching them unfurl from her girlfriend's lips. Under her gaze, Catra's mouth curves into a dangerous smirk, and suddenly Adora's being yanked forward by her scarf, happily colliding with the love of her life once more.

They part slowly, and Adora gives her a shy grin. “I think I'm starting to see how this ice-skating thing can be romantic.”

Catra rolls her eyes, but she's still smiling. “We didn't need to strap blades to our feet and be subjected to the elements for you to get me in this position. Now get off before Sparkles gives us another lecture about having 'decorum' in public.”

Once they manage to disentangle their limbs, Catra stands first. She helps Adora to her feet after, and doesn't let her hand go again—for "safety"—for the rest of their time on the ice.

End Notes

I realize this is the first full length (compared to a drabble anyway) post-canon fic that I've written. I have lots of headcanons, they just rarely coalesce into anything with an actual plot, so now you get this silly fluff piece with a random lore drop on telepads and their implications for the BFS road trip/Glimmer's sense of identity. XD Let me know if you want more of this kind of thing in the future!
