Kick Ass Squad (and sis)

by Bagge

Summary

When Hordak begins his conquest of Etheria, there is one brave group of friends who stand against him.

Grizzlor carefully let his eyes travel over the surrounding greenery. "Stay sharp. This is princess territory."

Cobalt trudged next to him, keeping a careful look of their line of spherical robots. They were fresh from the Frightzone workshops. "So what? They can't do anything against Hordak's new bots."

"You should know better than to underestimate the princesses. Just look how much trouble Ocativa landed herself in over in Salineas."

Cobalt scoffed. "That's because she tried to attack the Sea Gate like a fool. If she plays it smart and go for the supply lines like she's supposed to, the pirate king can sit behind his gate and rot for all Hordak cares.

A branch moved. They both trailed their guns in that direction, but could see nothing except the greenery.

"This place gives me the creeps," Grizzlor confessed.

"We're almost there. Just a few more hundred meters, then we can fortify and create the fuel depot."

"Do you think the Plumerian Princess will retaliate? We ARE on her side of the border."

"Only since the last border skirmish. Before that, this land belong to the Scorpion Queen."

"That was a hundred years ago."

"Yeah, but it still might make the other princesses hesitate long enough for us to entrench our position."

They walked on, carefully examining every moment in the bushes around them.

"Did you hear about the Black Garnet?" Cobalt said with low voice. Grizzlor didn't answer for a long moment, but then he gave a quick shrug. "The queens have waived their right, and Scorpia is just a baby..."

"Yeah, but still. For a washed up witch from Mystacor to get her paws all over our runestone..."

"Of course, I'm not questioning Lord Hordak's infinite wisdom!" Grizzlor quickly added.

"Of course not," Cobalt just as quickly answered.

They walked for a few more, uneasy steps and then Cobalt whispered. "Just between you and me, Shadow Weaver gives me the creeps. There are those who say that she might try to take out the queens..."

A tracker pad started to beep. Immediately the robots activated their weapons. Grizzlor swore and frantically scanned the surrounding bushes as Cobalt stared at the pad.

"It's a magic signature. A strong one. Right ahead on the trail."

"Princess?" Grizzlor spat.

"Must be! Proceed, but carefully."

They squatted down and peaked around the corner by the next bend of the road.

"Why, hello boys. Are you looking for little ol' me?" In the middle of the road sat a young man dressed in a flowy robe. His sleeves were rolled up, and around his arms shone complicated patterns of light.

"PRINCESS!" Grizzlor yelled and dropped to the ground, opening fire. Cobalt jumped back and furiously typed the activation sequence for the bots. Behind them, the robots rushed forward.

"Princess?" the man laughed as he jumped to his feet. The light around his arms spread and ignited a magical circle, painstakingly drawn in the dirt around him. Grizzlor swore as the magic caught the projectiles and energy blasts of their weapons and harmlessly threw them to the side. "Oh, I'm not a princess. I'm something far more dangerous than that." He walked forward in even pace, eyes and hands glowing blue.

"Oh yeah?" Grizzlor spat, trying to buy a few seconds as the robots got into position. "And what's that?"

"I'm a distraction." The man smiled and then abruptly winked out of existence.

"INCOMING!" Cobalt yelled, which was all the warning they got as a tornado descended on them, seemingly from nowhere. It tore through the narrow path where the robots had amassed, flinging them around like toys. Grizzlor only barely managed to get out of the way, clinging to a tree trunk.

"Regroup! Form a circle. Robots A to E, press forward find... oh shit."

"Oh shit indeed." A woman landed in a crouch just next to him and made a sweeping motion with her hands. Before Grizzlor fully had time to process what had happened, he was caught in a translucent, magical net. Another gesture, and several of the bots shared the same fate.

The man shimmered into existence and gave the woman a high five. "This is a princess."

"Good to know." Grizzlor activated his blaster and managed to cut a hole in the net. He scrambled to get away, but was thrown to the ground by a sudden gust of wind.

"And so am I." Another woman stepped into his field of vision, her wind blowing dramatically in the wind.

The rest of the group stepped up to her and glared at Grizzlor. "When you get back to the Fright Zone, tell Hordak that Plumeria is protected. Tell him that wherever he sends his machines, the Kick Ass Squad will be there to..."

"Tell him yourself." Cobalt launched an electrified metal net at the group, trapping them. "We're bringing you in to the Frightzone, so you'll have every opportunity to tell him exactly what he wants to hear."

"Hey! Tossing nets is my thing!"

"Silence!" Grizzlor came to his feet and gave Cobalt a thankful look. "Well done. We could have lost the whole robot fleet."

"You WILL lose the whole fleet," the net tossing princess yelled. "Just as soon as we get out of here."

"Pull back," Grizzlor ordered, not taking any notice of the princess. "Better secure the prisoners than trying to set up the fortifications. Hordak will... eh?"

"Hello, I'm looking for my brother." The newcomer was a young woman, hardly more than a girl, and had just politely stepped up to the soldiers.

"Casta! No!" the sorcerer cried, for the first time sounding scared.

"Grab her too," Grizzlor ordered. "We can sort it out in the Fright Zone."

"You could do that," Castaspella agreed. "Or you could look at the SPARKS TO YOUR FACE!" With a gesture she unleashed a flood of magical sparks, blinding both soldiers. When Grizzlor could see again, she was running into the woods. Swearing he turned towards the prisoners only to realise that the net was empty.

"RETREAT!" he cried. Followed by Cobalt he ran down the path they had come, with boths being destroyed left and right around them.

"That's right!" the sorcerer yelled after them over the raising wind. "Go back to the Fright Zone and tell Hordak that wherever he goes, the Kick Ass Squad will be there to stop him!"

Netossa contently poked at a destroyed bot. "Another great victory for the kick ass squad."

"And me," Castaspella demanded from her position on top of another wreck.

Micah gave his younger sister a tired look. "Casta, we have been through this. You can't follow us on missions. It's too dangerous."

She stuck out her tongue at him "Dangerous for you, you mean. It was lucky for you that I was around to get you out of trouble after you got yourself caught, like an idiot."

"Casta is right," Spinnerella said. "Catch phrases have to wait until after we have saved the day."

Micah shrugged. "A little branding never hurt anyone. It's important that Hordak knows that his conquest won't be without opposition."

Netossa made a grimace "It might just as well be. Snow is rigidly neutral, and the rest of the elemental princesses are sitting on their hands."

"That makes it even more important that we stand against them," Micah said with determined voice. "We have to show that it can be done. Set an example. Serve as inspiration." He grinned. "I'm meeting with Princess Angella of Brightmoon. If we can talk her into joining our cause, the rest will follow.

"And I'm sure that's the only reason you're going to Brightmoon," Casta teased.

"Shut up," Micah mumbled. He held out his hand, palm down. Netossa and Spinnerella immediately put their hands on it. Micah graciously nodded at Casta, who quickly put her hand on the pile as well.

"Kiiiiick Aaaaasss SQUAD!" they yelled in unison. "Aaaand Sis!" Castaspella added.

"And sis," Micah, Spinnerella and Netossa agreed.

They looked at each other and grinned.

"We're getting better," Spinnerella commented.

"So are they," Netossa warned and gave the wrecked bots around them a pointed look. "We can't get complacent."

"You worry too much," Micah said with carefree tone. "Whatever the Horde throw at us, they will be no match for the Kick Ass Squad!"

"And sis!"

"And sis."

End Notes

Much later, Glimmer got jealous about her dad's group having a cooler name then her. Mermista immediately conjured up a Kick Ass Squid. Micah found it hilarious.
