Meetings by Dusk

by TheGlimmadoraArchives

Summary

For "Glimmadora Appreciation Week 2024."

Prompt - Sun and Moon.

Glimmer pulled Adora into a hug. "You're the sun to my moon."

Dusk.

The time when the sun was preparing to set. And the moment the moon was ready to rise. For the dwellers in daylight, it meant a time to wind down and relax. For the nocturnal, it was a sign to emerge under the darkening sky.

One such woman, someone who could only be seen at night when the moon was full, stirred from her slumber. She was a vampire who had been around for centuries. But no one would suspect that due to Glimmer's youthful appearance.

The sun dipped into the horizon, the fading light resembling a candle's glow. Glimmer strolled into the woods, glimpsing the first few stars in the sky. A human's scent gave her pause. She tracked it to a clearing, where a blonde woman stood.

The woman was tall, with a slender physique. A red jacket and denim jeans encased her body. She was wearing sneakers. As if aware of another presence, she glanced in Glimmer's direction.

"Hello..." The woman said.

"Are you alone?" Glimmer asked.

"Yes. I'm taking a walk in the woods. Are you by yourself?"

"Of course. My name is Glimmer. And yours?"

"I'm Adora." Adora looked Glimmer up and down. "Didn't you have someone with you?"

Glimmer considered informing Adora of her enhanced abilities as a vampire. Instead, she decided against it. She settled on a believable response.

"I can protect myself," Glimmer said.

"Good to know, I guess. But I'm sure it would be nice to have some company." Adora took a plastic water bottle from her bag and sipped the clear liquid.

Glimmer noticed a faint flicker in Adora's neck. The tip of her tongue brushed her fangs. For a moment, she wondered what this girl's blood would taste like. She suppressed her desire.

"Is that fangs?" Adora asked.

Glimmer pressed her lips together. "It's a trick of the moonlight."

"Okay. I'm going to head home. So... nice meeting you."

They parted ways. Glimmer hadn't seen Adora before, and she had been in town for several years. Not long after, she walked through town, keeping to the shadows. She passed an alleyway when a struggle reached her ears. Gruff voices shouted at someone, most likely a woman.

"You think you can keep us away, pretty girl?" A male voice said.

"Get your hands off of me!" A female shouted.

With swift, unseen movements, Glimmer charged at the attackers. Thanks to enhanced strength, she kept them at bay with ease. The men raced off, exclaiming in surprise and annoyance. She turned to look at whoever she defended. It was Adora. What was the girl thinking, walking in a dangerous area?

"Glimmer, how did you-" Adora's voice trailed off, her eyes wide with awe.

"We could talk later. Your safety is what matters," Glimmer said.

"They were taller and stronger. I would have expected a buff person to fight them off."

"I have my ways. I could keep you company."

They began walking. Cars whizzed by as the duo continued down the sidewalk. From time to time, Adora peeked at Glimmer. She wanted to know more about the mysterious woman. Stories of vampires came to mind, but she shrugged them off. Perhaps Glimmer had years of training. Still, the shorter woman was speedy during the fight.

Adora hadn't forgotten the glimpse of fangs from earlier. And the glow in Glimmer's eyes... Something about it didn't seem human. At some point, Glimmer's hand brushed Adora's. Glimmer's hand was cool to the touch.

The street transitioned into a quiet neighborhood where Adora lived. She approached her house. They stopped at the door. And as she turned to thank Glimmer for accompanying her, the woman was already gone. A bat hovered nearby. It was pink and purple, its fur glittering.

Curious, Adora observed the bat for a minute. It flitted into the darkness. She entered her house and shut the door behind her. Either it was a dream, or the alleyway ambush made her imagine things. She couldn't deny how captivating Glimmer was.

Adora shook her head. She probably watched one too many vampire shows and movies. After a shower, she plopped onto her bed and fell asleep. Even in slumber, dreams of Glimmer surfaced.

Weeks passed as both women continued meeting after sunset, getting to know each other. In a sense, it was like the sun and moon met together. Adora, the girl who enjoyed daylight, would extend her time with Glimmer. And with time, she learned her new friend was a vampire. Was it any wonder Glimmer preferred the night? During full moon nights, her hair would glitter under the moonlight.

One night, Glimmer waited by the usual meeting spot. Gazing at the stars, the vampire thought of Adora. The taller woman was beautiful, especially during dusk. Adora had a bright, sunny personality and an endearing smile. And who would forget those sky-blue eyes?

Soon, Adora came. Her hair cascaded over her shoulders, and her cheeks were pink from the coolness of night. She smiled upon seeing Glimmer.

"Hello," Adora said.

Glimmer approached, and they sat on a log. The stream splashed against the rocks and floating branches. Its tiny waves shimmered in the moonlight. Fireflies danced in the air, emitting glows.

"It's beautiful out here," Adora whispered.

"It sure is." Glimmer gave Adora a side glance. "More than the daylight, I might add."

Adora chuckled. "I'll stick with my daylight lifestyle, thank you very much."

"Somehow, I don't find it surprising. You humans love that ball of light."

"The sun brings warmth."

"Maybe it does for you humans, but the night benefits nocturnal life. There are stars to look at."

Adora nodded. "True. The world needs both night and day."

Glimmer pulled Adora into a hug. "You're the sun to my moon."

They spent the rest of the evening in silence together. Adora never thought she'd fall in love with a vampire. However, she didn't mind. Glimmer's presence brought a sense of comfort and security. At night, she had someone looking out for her. And it was her girlfriend.
