Only one bus seat

by Psychopath_seal

Summary

"Not this bitch again," Casta thought to herself. All of her interactions with Shadow Weaver ended in very awkward situations. She had a feeling that this time would be no different.

This was originally supposed to be a one-shot, but my friend told me to write more

Chapter 1

Casta sat down on the bench at the bus stop. She was thinking about her work, among other things, so it took her a while to notice the tall, dark figure standing a few meters away. Shadow Weaver. “Not this bitch again,” She thought to herself.

She had mixed feelings about this woman. Shadow was an incredibly rude and annoying person, who liked teasing her.

Casta disliked her for that but always blushed whenever Shadow stood beside her. There was something irresistible about the older woman. She couldn't help but be amazed by how beautiful she was even with her scars. She tried hard to resist the urge to touch her long, black, fluffy hair. She loved the way Shadow’s smooth, deep voice sounded in her ears.

Having said that Shadow Weaver was still incredibly annoying, and all of Casta’s interactions with her ended in very awkward situations. She had a feeling that this time would be no different.

As the bus arrived, she noticed it was full of people. As they were getting on the bus, Shadow finally looked at her. “Hey, Casta.” She said in a teasing voice. Casta took a deep breath. “Hello, Shadow Weaver.” She replied, trying to remain calm.

Casta sat down and Shadow stood beside her. The tall woman was now towering over her. “So, what’s new?” Shadow asked. “Not much, work has been stressful,” Casta answered. “ Oh, that sucks.” “It does.”

As the bus arrived at the next stop, Shadow was forced to move out of the way so people could exit the bus.

The tall woman was now standing in front of Casta. She leaned forward, placing her hand on Casta’s seat, instead of holding onto anything else like any normal person would. Casta was starting to think, that the accident Shadow got her scars from, caused her to have some sort of brain damage as well.

She noticed that she was blushing from just how close that woman was to her. The people on the bus were either on their phones or reading and didn't seem to pay any attention to them.

"Can you get away from me?" Casta angrily said. "Okay," Shadow replied and took her hand off the seat. The bus stopped and Shadow Weaver, who wasn't holding onto anything, lost her balance and fell onto Casta. The taller woman quickly got up, her face red from embarrassment.

The person sitting next to Casta got off the bus and Shadow Weaver sat in their place. Casta looked at her. Shadow was looking out the bus window, her green eyes fixated on their reflection.

Casta was trying to understand, what she felt for that woman. Why was she feeling this way about her?

"You're staring." Shadow's deep voice pulled her out of her thoughts, those hypnotic green eyes now looking into her own. Shadow smirked. "You're looking at me like you want to kiss me." Casta blushed. "Well, come on, sweetheart, don't be shy. Do it, if you want to do it so badly." Shadow said. To Shadow's surprise, Casta actually pulled her into a kiss. Pressing the taller woman's lips against her own.

The bus stopped. Casta quickly pulled away and exited the bus. She turned back to see Shadow Weaver sitting there, looking shocked and confused.

Casta was right. This ended awkwardly as always, but surprisingly this time she didn't hate it. Things between them were starting to change and she wanted to see where this goes.

Chapter Notes

As the bus drove away Shadow sat there, shocked that Casta actually did it. Sure, she kind of asked for it, but she didn't expect Casta to kiss her. And even though she was afraid to admit it, she liked it. Why was that so hard to accept? She knew she was gay, she liked women, so why was it so hard to admit that she liked Casta? Maybe because she didn't realize Casta was into it until a few minutes ago? Or maybe it was because Casta was so goddamn annoying? Whatever the real reason was, she had to do what she always did whenever she was bored, angry, or simply didn't want to think about this alone - annoy Casta about it.

Casta was walking home when she felt her phone buzz. She looked at her phone. It was a message from Shadow Weaver.

-Did you just kiss me?

She replied.

-You kind of told me to

-I didn't know you were into girls

-I guess you don't know everything about me

-Who could have thought

-So, what now?

- What do you mean?

-Nevermind

She put her phone back in her pocket and continued walking.

Shadow was going to bed when she noticed another message from Casta.

- Do you want to hang out tomorrow

-Why?

-I don’t know

- Are you trying to ask me out or something?

-Do you want to meet or not?

-Sorry I can’t go tomorrow or the day after

-Oh, okay then. Goodnight

The next day it was raining, Casta sat at the bus stop. She didn’t bother to check the weather forecast, so now she was soaked in the rain and freezing. She did not pay attention to Shadow Weaver, who sat beside her. This was weird. They sat together for ten minutes without Shadow insulting her or doing anything stupid. Casta looked at her, memorizing the pattern of her scars, and admiring that long black hair that she wanted to touch so badly. Suddenly Shadow turned to look her in the eyes and in that moment pathetic she looked soaking wet and shivering from the cold. Shadow Weaver took off her jacket and placed it on Casta’s shoulders “Only an idiot like you could go out wearing a short-sleeved shirt in this kind of weather". Casta blushed at the sound of Shadow Weaver's voice.

The bus ride went quietly, Casta sat next to Shadow, not daring to make eye contact. She was still thinking about the kiss, how good Shadow's lips felt on her own. She wished she could do it again. Shadow Weaver was also lost in her thoughts, trying to understand the feelings she had for Casta. The younger woman still annoyed her, and Shadow still disliked her pathetic attempts at insults and the way she complained about random things. But there was something she found adorable about Casta. She loved the way Casta looked at her, she loved her smile and the way she laughed, she loved her.

They continued to sit in silence until the bus stopped. Casta got up and exited the bus. She quickly walked home, still wearing Shadow's jacket. As she climbed up the stairs to her apartment, she noticed a cat sitting next to the door. Once she opened the door, the cat jumped inside. "Get out," she said, annoyed at the creature. The cat didn't move. She went inside and tried to pick up the animal, but it got out of her hand and ran into the living room to hide God knows where. After almost two hours of trying to get the cat out of her home, she just gave up. She picked up her phone and decided to text Shadow.

-I accidentally took your jacket home with me, we need to meet so I can return it.
-OK, we can meet on Friday, I'm busy tomorrow.
-K

She put her phone down and went to check if the cat would finally cooperate and get out of the cupboard.

Chapter End Notes

There will be one more chapter because SW needs to get her jacket back

Chapter 3

On Friday afternoon Casta was cleaning up the spilled tea from the cup the cat knocked over. After she found out that the evil creature didn't belong to anyone and didn't plan on leaving her house any time soon, she decided to keep it and started to think it was a mistake. In the time of two days, the cat proved himself to be a nightmare, but the short-haired creature with brown fur, razor-sharp claws, and yellow eyes that stared right into your soul was just too cute to be angry at.

Once she was done cleaning the mess, she heard the doorbell ring. Just as she expected, it was Shadow Weaver. "Hey Casta," Shadow said. "Hi, here's your jacket," Casta replied, handing her the jacket. " Sorry for taking it." " It's okay." "You want some tea?" "Sure."

As Shadow stepped inside, the cat started rubbing itself against her. "Since when do you have a cat?" "Since two days ago, he just came in here and refused to leave, I don't have a name for him yet."

As Casta made the tea, Shadow sat on the couch, looking at her when the cat jumped into her lap. She looked at it, not daring to move, but when the cat dug its sharp claws into her legs, she flinched in pain, the cat jumped away from her and decided to sit on the table instead, knocking over a glass while doing so.

"May I suggest Demon or Gremlin for the cat's name?" She said. Casta looked at the cat "Gremlin does seem like a fitting name for him." She placed the tea on the table and bent down to pick up the broken pieces of glass from the floor. After that, she picked up Gremlin and put him on the ground.

Shadow and Casta awkwardly drank their tea, not daring to make eye contact with each other. Casta was the first to speak. "Listen, about the kiss on the bus…" "You're still thinking about it?" "...I just wanted to say sorry if I made you uncomfortable" "You didn't,

I just didn’t think you’d do it.” “You didn’t want me to?” “I did, but I didn’t know you wanted it too.” “I kind of… always had feelings for you.“ “So you were trying to ask me out then?!” “I was."

Casta pulled Shadow Weaver into a kiss. Shadow kissed back. Casta ran her hands through Shadow’s soft, black hair while she parted her lips and slid her tongue into Shadow’s mouth. They kissed like that for a few more seconds before Gremlin interrupted the moment by meowing loudly. Casta pulled away from Shadow and went to put Gremlin, who managed to climb onto the fridge while they were kissing, back on the ground.

“So are we like… dating now, or what?” Shadow asked. “I guess so,” Casta said. She finished her tea and sat on the couch to cuddle with Shadow, enjoying this moment with her girlfriend, before Gremlin broke another glass.
