A Warm Welcome to a Cold Place

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/72311456.

Rating:
General Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Category:
F/M

Fandoms:
Frozen (Disney Movies), She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationship:
Angella/Micah (She-Ra)

Characters:
Angella (She-Ra), Micah (She-Ra), Anna (Disney), Elsa (Disney), Kristoff (Disney), Sven (Disney: Frozen), Olaf (Disney)

Additional Tags:
Minor Anna/Kristoff (Disney)

Language:
English

Collections:
Crossworks 2025

Stats:
Published: 2025-10-11 Words: 2,689 Chapters: 1/1

A Warm Welcome to a Cold Place

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/72311456.

Rating:
General Audiences

Archive Warning:
No Archive Warnings Apply

Category:
F/M

Fandoms:
Frozen (Disney Movies), She-Ra and the Princesses of Power (2018)

Relationship:
Angella/Micah (She-Ra)

Characters:
Angella (She-Ra), Micah (She-Ra), Anna (Disney), Elsa (Disney), Kristoff (Disney), Sven (Disney: Frozen), Olaf (Disney)

Additional Tags:
Minor Anna/Kristoff (Disney)

Language:
English

Collections:
Crossworks 2025

Stats:
Published: 2025-10-11 Words: 2,689 Chapters: 1/1

A Warm Welcome to a Cold Place

by silveradept

Summary

Micah was told by his daughter to go find her mother. With the aid of something of Entrapta's that works correctly the first time, Micah lands in Arendelle, where he meets the Queen and her consort and enlists the aid of the Fifth Spirit to bring him and his wife home again.

It hadn't quite been a royal command, but Glimmer had told Micah that with Horde Prime defeated, he should work on the problem of trying to find Angella again, and to bring her back from wherever she'd gone when the rift the Sword had opened closed. There had been a fair amount of discussion over whether to let Entrapta at the sword, to see if she could replicate the situation and give Angella a way out, but ultimately, wiser heads had prevailed and Micah had instead taken some of Entrapta's experiments based on the First Ones interstellar ship technology. Beast Island was a suitable place for running Entrapta's experiments. If they went explosively wrong, which Micah expected most of them would, then they would be far away from anything that might be important. And depending on how they malfunctioned, they might even take care of some of the more stubborn or dangerous inhabitants.

He was starting with the most complex one to set up, on the assumption that it would be the most difficult to salvage if one of the others went wrong and tried to destroy other things. He'd left the rest with Emily (Entrapta named all of her robots Emily, it seemed) far enough away that it shouldn't be caught in the blast radius.

"And now we hook up the power supply, and see whether we have to run away very quickly," he said to himself, connecting the final pieces to the portable power supply Entrapta had provided him with. The orbs in a circle around a central pillar pulsed, emitted a green light, and then began moving lights around their centers in chaotic patterns before synchronizing. Once they turned green, the pillar itself began having similar lights rotating around it. When it turned green, Micah saw a bright flash.

"Warn people about…" he started, before realizing that he wasn't on Beast Island. He'd spent many years there, thanks to the Horde, and he knew for a fact that it never snowed there. That the entire field around him was covered in snow suggested that Entrapta's device had worked accordingly, and deposited him… somewhere.

Also, it was cold. Spying what looked like a dwelling, Micah stomped through the snow to the door and opened it.

The two people inside the cabin looked up at his entry. Neither of them screamed or brandished weapons, which Micah considered to be a good sign. They spoke, both between themselves and at him, but he couldn't understand them. Eventually, the woman caught on to their communication difficulty, and drew a snowflake in the air. Micah felt the familiar tug of magic around him as a different woman with white-blond hair in a long braid appeared in the snowflake's space. The two of them had a swift conversation, with the white-blonde woman shaking her head a lot and the red-blonde woman wearing her hair in a shorter braid made emphatic gestures to try and change her mind about whatever they were talking about.

Finally, the white-haired woman seemed to give up and her image in the snowflake faded, replaced by someone he never thought he would see again.

"Angella!" he shouted.

"Micah!" she replied.

"I thought you were dead," they said together.

The red-blonde woman looked smug, and elbowed the regularly blonde-haired man beside her.

"Where are we?" Micah asked.

"How did you find me?" Angella asked at the same time.

Micah waited a moment to see if Angella would start speaking again, before he gave his answer. "Entrapta built machines meant to find wherever you had gone, and they seem to have worked without exploding in the process."

"You don't know that yet," Angella replied. "That could have been a one-way trip and now both of us are presumed dead."

"There's no one I would rather be dead with than you," Micah said,smiling at her. "Where are we?"

Angella frowned. "Queen Elsa tells me this land is called Arendelle. We haven't talked much more than that before Anna wanted to talk to her about you arriving, apparently."

"So you haven't been here long, either?"

"No." Angella shook her head. "How long has it been since I disappeared? How's Glimmer?"

"Glimmer was fine when I left her. She's matured into a strong-willed woman who knows what it will take to command Bright Moon against any dangers."

"What about the Horde?"

"Defeated. And the Horde that showed up after them."

"After them?" Angella's wings fluttered her distress. "We need to talk."

"I agree," Micah said, "but unless you know how to talk to everyone here, that will be hard to arrange."

"Queen Elsa can do the arranging. I just want you here." Angella's face disappeared from the snowflake, replaced by Elsa's. She spoke to the red-blonde woman and the blonde-haired man, both of them nodding. The snowflake faded away, leaving the three of them awkwardly in the same room together.

The red-blonde woman pointed to herself. "Anna," she said. She pointed at the blonde man. "Kristoff." She pointed at Micah and made a questioning face.

"Micah," he said, pointing at himself, hoping that she'd just introduced them as Anna and Kristoff.

"Anna, Kristoff, Micah," she said, pointing to each of them.

Outside, something made a long, loud noise.

"Sven," Kristoff said, annoyance clear in his tone. He made to leave, but the red-haired one said something to him that made him stop, and then look Micah over, before nodding and opening a box containing clothes. Picking out a long coat, a hat, and a set of gloves, he offered them to Micah. Micah was expecting them to be wrong, but they all fit well enough on him, and he immediately felt warmer after having put them on.

Anna made a comment to Kristoff, the only thing Micah understood in it sounded like "Yoo-hoo," to him. Both of them laughed. Micah was pretty sure they were making fun of something about him, but he couldn't exactly communicate his distaste for it. Then Kristoff looked at him, nudged Anna, and both of them stopped and said something that sounded like an apology. Maybe he had communicated perfectly well even without knowing the language.

Stepping outside, Micah felt the winds blowing against his new outer layer, but none of the cold snuck inside, and none of the snow on the ground tried to soak through, either. Anna made a waiting signal with her hands as she and Kristoff moved to the other side of the house, where it seemed like Kristoff and the creature that had bellowed earlier engaged on a spirited debate about something.

"Oh, hello there," a being made of snow, tree branches, and what looked to be stones and vegetables said to him. "I don't think I've seen you before."

Micah regarded the snow creature suspiciously. "Are you some kind of magical construct?" he asked.

"Yep! I'm Olaf," the construct said, sticking out a tree branch to shake hands. Micah took it gently and shook the arm delicately.

"Micah. How can you understand me when they can't?"

"Oh, it's probably some side effect of having been one of the first things Queen Elsa created, while she was still testing the limits of her creativity, knowledge, and power. I'm a natural polyglot, like she is, but the only things we converse with around here are reindeer and ancient magical and spiritual beings, so it's not like I have many opportunities to see how many languages I can speak. Oh! You speak like that other lady we found a little while ago."

"Yes, I think we're going to see her. She's my wife."

"Oh, how magical!" Olaf said as a sled with the reindeer pulling came from the other side of the house. Olaf immediately went over to talk to Anna and Kristoff, who brightened considerably about halfway in.

Olaf waved Micah over to the sled.

"They're sorry about earlier," he said, as the sled began moving. "You happened to look a lot like a sauna proprietor Anna met when she was trying to save Arendelle from freezing over. And eventually, from Hans." Olaf waited a brat before continuing. "They didn't mean to upset you."

"Thank them for the clothing. It's much colder here than even Frosta's palace."

"Who's Frosta?" Olaf said, Anna nodding vigorously in agreement at the question.

"She's one of the princesses where I'm from. She has powers over ice and cold."

"She might get along well with Elsa, then," Olaf said. When both Anna and Micah frowned at that upon hearing it, Olaf chose not to pursue it any further.

The ride was short, thankfully, for all the bumps the sled bounced over and hills that needed climbing. Or, at least, Micah thought it was short, but with the fog that had descended on them while he was looking elsewhere, he wasn't sure exactly how far they had gone.

Sven snorted and stopped.

"Elsa?" Anna called.

"Give me a minute," came floating back through the mist, before a gout of flame erupted, temporarily clearing the mist and showing the white-blond woman from before and Angella beside her. Sven shied from the fire, but Kristoff put a hand on his shoulder to calm him down.

"Not funny, Bruni," Elsa said, this time entirely comprehensible to Micah.

Olaf hopped out of the sled. "Looks like my job in this adventure is over. I'm going back to my sunbathing," he said, disappearing into the mist.

"No, they don't take well to being threatened," Elsa said as she and Angela eventually got close enough to be seen through the mist. Angella had been similarly dressed for cold, while Elsa looked to be covered in something that twinkled like ice but couldn't possibly be warm enough for her.

Before he could consider anything else about Elsa, Angella tackled him in a flying hug, an embrace he returned to her with equal affection. They spent minutes holding and kissing each other and convincing each other that they were real. Once they had satisfied themselves, they stood and brushed the snow off themselves, visibly attempting to return to the personas of King Micah and Queen Angella, instead of two lovesick fools granted a major miracle.

"Your Majesties," Elsa said, amusement in her voice, "may I present Queen Angella of Bright Moon and her husband, King Micah?"

"Thank you for the introduction, Fifth Spirit and Protector of Arendelle and Northuldra. We are glad to receive them," Anna said, equally as amused.

Sven snorted loudly, a clear dismissal of the formalities and a mockery of them.

"This is international diplomacy, Sven," Kristoff said. "At least try to honor the dignity of being the royal reindeer."

Sven gave an even louder snort.

"My sister, Anna, is Queen of Arendelle with her consort, Kristoff," Elsa explained.

"And my sister, Elsa, was Queen of Arendelle before discovering she's the living bridge between our world of humans and the world of the spirits," Anna added. "So she had to give up ruling to do this instead." From the sound of it, Anna believed Elsa got the better part of that deal.

"What happens now?" Micah asked Angella.

"Now, you fill me in on what our daughter and her friends have been up to since I left them behind."

"Well, first there was the revelation that the Hordak that had been giving us trouble was only a clone of a much meaner and better-equipped Hordak. Also, did you know the First Ones intended to use Etheria itself as a weapon against this particular Hordak? And that the runestones and the Princesses were the key to firing that weapon?"

"What?" Angella said.

"Also, apparently, Adora and Catra reconciled and their love was the only reason the weapon didn't fire. And, um, my, uh, mentor in Mystacor, Light Spinner? Died protecting them while they were doing it."

Angella gave Micah a look of complete disbelief. "Shadow Weaver protected anyone at all?"

"Yes?" Micah said, shrugging.

"And Glimmer?" Angella went on, choosing not to pursue that particular line of questioning right then.

"Doing well. I think she's sweet on Bow, but she's going to wait until he gets a clue before doing anything about it. She told me to go find you. And I have."

Angella took this in stride. "Anything else I should know?"

"They'll all be very glad to see you, assuming we can get back to where we came from."

"We can help with that," Anna said.

"Not unless you can build another one of Entrapta's contraptions," Micah said.

"Hon," Angella said in the tone that meant he needed to stop talking, "let's listen to what they have to say."

"Well, when I say we, what I really mean is Elsa can do it, the same way that she pulled Queen Angella out of the mists."

Angella shuddered. "I'm glad to be here, and reunited with my husband," she said, "but I do not want to go back to that void."

"Without you holding that gate open, wherever you were imprisoned should have collapsed entirely," Elsa said. "And while some beings,"—she patted the very large salamander by her side—"believe playing jokes on others is funny, the spirits won't lead me astray."

"Is there another solution?" Angella asked, tightening her grip on Micah.

"Well, Glimmer said that Adora and Catra had repaired Mara's ship so it could travel between planets," Micah said nonchalantly. "If this place is in the same universe as Etheria, they'll find us eventually. Or our descendants, anyway." That earned him a glare from Angella. "Okay, it sounds like we're going with Elsa's solution, then."

"It's not easy going back into somewhere I spent a lot of time trying to get out of," Angella said.

"If we get lost, we'll at least get lost together," Micah reassured her, which didn't soften Angella's glare any. "Do you trust Elsa as a guide?" he asked.

"I do," Angella said. "She brought me out the first time. There was a singing voice that I heard, and followed it until I found Elsa. Not that Northuldra hasn't been lovely, and the company is certainly better than what I had before, but I would love to be home with my husband and my daughter."

"She's Queen Glimmer now, no doubt about it. If you try to treat her like your daughter, she might send you both Adora and Catra to make your life miserable." Micah chuckled. "Those two are so much happier now that they can be in love without anyone trying to separate them."

Mist was beginning to gather around them again. Micah looked more closely at it, and shivered, despite the warmth of his clothing. He was entirely used to rain coming from the clouds above, rather than the ground under a cloudless sky. He glanced over to Elsa, to ensure she was still visible and close by.

"Is she…" Micah asked Angella.

"Cold doesn't bother her. Neither do most elements, actually. She was wearing more for us than she usually does, because her sister and her brother-in-law were visiting," Angella explained. "From what we've discussed, it sounds like people-made objects can interfere with some of her duties."

"A figure like hers must have brought quite a few men courting her."

"Until she accidentally froze Arendelle Port, subjected the country to a constant winter, and nearly killed her sister by slowly freezing her heart." Angella pointed out, perhaps a little defensively in Micah's opinion.

"That would put a chill on a relationship, yes," he said. "Queen Anna seems made of tough stuff, then, to resist being frozen so easily."

"Yes," Angella told him. "She punched the villain responsible for all the trouble when she had the opportunity to do so."

Micah wasn't sure how to process that piece of information, based on the small interaction he'd had with Queen Anna.

"All right," Elsa said. "Bruni, no fire unless it's necessary. Gale, if we start to stray, sing us back on track. Micah? Angella? Are you ready?"

"Yes," they said together.

"Follow me," Elsa said.

Micah and Angella smiled at each other, linked their hands, kissed, and followed the fifth spirit into the unknown.

Please drop by the Archive and comment to let the creator know if you enjoyed their work!