Welcome To The Neighbourhood

by TheStarGayzingEtherian

Summary

Perfuma, a beautiful dryad woman, has recently moved into a new neighbourhood, hoping to use her magic to cultivate a wonderful garden of plants and flowers. Unfortunately though, her peaceful little world gets shattered. (Scorfuma, Modern Etheria AU, Fluff)

Perfuma had hoped for some peace and quiet when she'd moved to this new neighbourhood. Her old apartment downtown was very cramped and the noise from the traffic at night kept her up at night often. Not to mention a small apartment wasn't really the right place for a Dryad like her to live.

Now though, in this quiet little suburban home, she found herself in a place of tranquillity, the perfect place to tend to her garden. Ever since she was a child growing up in Plumeria, Perfuma had always loved flowers and plants. Their colours and beauty were often a beautiful sight.

And her garden was a wonder of the world, with rows upon rows of beds filled with flowers of all kinds. From Lillies to roses, from marigolds to daffodils. It was truly a work of art and it filled her with joy as she woke up to the sight of it every morning.

But such a masterpiece needed regular love and care. And a bit of magic too. That afternoon, Perfuma was finishing pulling out some weeds that had grown in her bed of purple tulips, gently making sure she didn't pull so hard lest she accidentally pull out one of her precious tulips. Once the weeds were pulled out, she raised her hand over the holes, casting some of her plant magic to sprout new flowers where the weeds had once been.

The sun was high in the sky and clouds filled the heavens. As Perfuma looked up at the view, she sighed in contentment. Truly, she was standing in paradise. She hummed a little tune to herself as she stood in the centre of the garden, spinning around and bathing herself in the sunlight.

However, such a peaceful scene was shattered, when something crashed out of the sky and smashed into Perfuma's bed of dahlias with a sickening sound, trampling the flowers inside of it. Perfuma gasped in horror, her heart racing.

"Oh dear..." a voice groaned.

“Do you see the ball, Aunt Scorpia?” Another, much younger voice asked.

Perfuma looked up, seeing a woman with short white hair with an undercut poking over her fence, a nervous look on her face.

“Sorry!” the woman exclaimed, noticing Perfuma. “My nibling and I were playing some soccer and they kicked the ball a bit too hard.”

Seeing the bed of Dahlias, Perfuma saw the distinctive shape of a black and white soccer ball. She sighed, getting up and picking it up. She lamented the sad state of her Dahlias, several of them crushed and others covered in dirt. It was enough to make her heart break. She felt for each and every one of the flowers she grew.

Part of her was a little angry, but as she looked over the fence and saw the other woman stare back at her, she regretted feeling angry. It was an accident and at the very least, it could have been worse. The ball could have smashed her windows or hit her right in the head.

“Is this it?” She asked.

“Yes!” The woman stated. “Hang on, I'll come over! Come on, Finn.”

Right then, Perfuma saw the white-haired woman and a small, tan-furred, blonde-haired child who seemed to be a mix of human and Magicat following her walk around the fence and into her garden. What surprised Perfuma the most... Was how tall the white-haired woman was, not to mention how big her muscles were. And she certainly wasn’t expecting her to be a scorpion woman either, with big red pincers and a long tail.

For much of her life, Perfuma had gotten quite used to being the tallest one in the room. Hell, most women like herself who transitioned were quite on the tall side before realising their true genders. But this woman? To Perfuma, she seemed as tall as a skyscraper. The blonde had to blush at the sight of her. Who would have thought she'd had moved next door to an amazon?

Perfuma then handed the soccer ball to the young child, smiling. "Here you go."

"Thank you," they replied.

"Now tell the lady you're sorry, Finn," the arachnid said, slightly stern, nudging the little one with her tail.

"No, they don't have to apologise," Perfuma insisted. "To be honest, I should have been more prepared for something like this."

"You're not mad at me?" the young child asked.

Perfuma knelt down. "I learned a long time ago that sometimes, there's no need to get angry. What happened was an accident. Just be more careful with that ball in future okay? You wouldn't want someone to get hurt would you."

"No, I'd feel pretty bad if that happened."

"Exactly, and I'm sure they'd feel pretty bad too. So please, be a bit more gentle with that ball."

"I will!" Finn chirped. They then ran back to the garden, the white-haired woman feeling quite embarrassed. Perfuma looked her over, watching the Scorpioni tap her claws together nervously. If she were honest, she'd gone from a giant buff amazon to a big soft cuddlebug.

"Well, I'm really sorry," she spoke. "I should have been watching them more carefully, but I haven't had a chance to see them lately and we were having fun and oh gosh, your flowers got trampled really bad didn't they? Again I'm really sorry!"

Perfuma smiled. "No, you don't need to be sorry either, my dear. Everyone makes mistakes. Besides, your nibling has clearly got talent if they can kick a ball that high. You must be a proud aunt."

"Oh! Well, I am, but Finn's not technically my nibling," the woman explained. "Well, not biologically… I mean if they were, they'd probably have a tail or… gosh I'm rambling again, sorry. See I'm like really good buds with one of their moms but they're out of town for the weekend and I'm looking after the little nugget for them until they get back."

"Ah, I see," Perfuma accepted.

"You've uhhh... Got a really lovely garden here, by the way," the woman complimented her. "You just moved in? I could have sworn this place used to belong to some other person. Sorry, don't really keep much track of the neighbours around her."

"Oh yes, I'm new!" Perfuma answered. "Been here a little over a few weeks now. I'd just gotten my garden the way I wanted it to be."

"You're a dryad right?" the woman then wondered. "Just thought you might be considering well, only a dryad would be able to make a garden like this grow in such a short time."

"Yup, that's me," Perfuma replied. "I admit, it's probably a little cheating using my powers to grow all these plants."

"Nah, a garden's a garden, whether it be grown with magic or the old-fashioned way," her new acquaintance replied. "Well, it's a delight to meet you! Oh, where are my manners, I haven't introduced myself, my name's Scorpia."

"Perfuma."

"Oooh, that's a really pretty name," Scorpia replied, blushing a little. "Would you uhhh... Like to come round for dinner? I know you said no apologies needed, gosh darned it I wanna do something nice for you to make up for your flowers being all squished like that. But like, if you're busy, I totally am cool with-"

“I’d love to!” Perfuma chimed in, eyes wide. “That’s a really sweet offer.”

“Oh!” Scorpia was blushing even more now. “Well uhhh... Okay then! I'll see you later!”

As Scorpia left, Perfuma had the biggest smile on her face. Yes, she was still a little sad over what happened to her dahlias, but on the other hand... She was going to have dinner with a gorgeous muscular beauty that night. That more than made up for it. She then walked over to the spot in the grass where the dahlias had been crushed.

Pulling the weeds away, Perfuma then got an idea for the flower to take their place. With her magic, she sprouted a beautiful purple desert wildflower, a reminder of the woman she had met… and hopefully a sign that Scorpia was going to be a part of her garden, and part of her life for a long time to come.
