who are you, exactly?

by moonlitrosie

Summary

"That's… not my name." The girl says, now carefully examining her nails. They're painted, Catra notices. A nice, cool shade of blue.

Catra scoffs. "I'm sorry then, miss all mysterious. How would you prefer me to address you as? I wonder… does Margo work? Or maybe Shane?"

The blonde chuckles, throwing her hand on her forehead clumsily. She's confused.

"Well, wouldn't you like to know?" A simple question, but it throws Catra off-board gravely.

"I'm… pretty sure that's why I asked?" She replies, putting her hand on her hip. "You know, for a person who gets straight As in all her classes, you sure aren't very smart."

The girl frowns. "I'm trying to be mysterious and sexy. You sure aren't helping."

"Well, sorry to break it to you, but you're failing both." Catra fakes a smile, tilting to head her one side.

Catra doesn’t know where or when, but ever since the fifth of November, this mysterious blonde just rodded into her sociology class without a name.

Her professor doesn’t do attendance, she claims that it’s a waste of time and a pain to get through, so they’ve never done it. She doesn’t do calling either, it’s whoever speaks just speaks. It’s sad, really, because this blonde girl is the only girl who’s been able to get Catra’s attention since the sixth grade (with this girl named Hasley), and she never really ever learned this mystery girl’s name. I mean- she has. Only her dozen alter egos.

November fifth, when she first walked into the classroom with her ridiculous hair pouf and her shiny new backpack, she introduced herself as Margo. At first, Catra believed her. She even walked up to her once to see if she wanted to ‘hang out’, but the girl didn’t even respond to her own name. That was when Catra started to suspect something.

December first, she saw her hanging out with Glimmer. The girl obviously spotted Catra from across the room and whispered something in Glimmer’s ear. Catra had squinted her eyebrows, and when they walked away, she saw a tag on the girl’s backpack that read, ‘Shane’.

January nineteenth, Catra knew was the girl’s birthday. How? Her sociology professor had gotten everyone to sing a birthday song for her. In the song, she claimed to be Tessa, but of course, Catra knew she wasn’t telling the truth. The girl wore a black leather jacket that day. It looked absolutely stunning on her, if Catra could say so herself. Her denim jeans were cuffed near her heels and she was twirling her fingers around a basketball as she walked into the room and sat gracefully in her seat without dropping the ball even once. The whole entrance was majestic, and it just added more mystery to who this girl really was. Tall, blonde, buff? Exactly Catra’s type.

Sometimes she'd see her hanging around Bow too. They got along really well. Catra would usually see them together in the library, picking up books, turning them to a random page, and laughing at whatever was so funny on there. It made Catra smile when she saw her, it was like seeing an angel from heaven carefully descend down to earth to give Catra warmth and happiness. The feeling was unmatched.

The twelfth day of February was when Catra really found out what the girl's name was. She noticed the girl ask to go to the bathroom in class and subconsciously decided to run into the bathroom after her. She went two minutes after her to avoid suspicion.

It's a miracle Catra finds her, honestly, This girl is so unpredictable it's starting to piss Catra off.

She's leaning against the back wall by the time she barges in. Smirking, hands crossed comfortably together in front of her chest. Catra won't admit it, but it's really, really hot. She's trying to think of some witty starter, something to break the silence between them, something like, 'had fun messing with me for the past four months?', or 'are you finally going to reveal your lame-ass name, Margo ?'. She'd say it spitefully, but instead what comes out of her mouth is-

"Tessa."

You know, sometimes it's like Catra doesn't have full control over her brain. It's just wandering and wandering until it finds something completely idiotic to say. She doesn't know why out of all the names she's heard her go by, Tessa is the one that comes out. Maybe because it's the one that suits her the most.

The girl lifts her arm and waves her hand at Catra, her sly little smirk still plastered all over that dumb face. Catra would punch it to get it off, but it's really the prettiest face she's ever seen, and punching it would ruin basically everything.

So instead, she merely waves back sarcastically, crossing her own hands together.

"That's… not my name." The girl says, now carefully examining her nails. They're painted, Catra notices. A nice, cool shade of blue.

Catra scoffs. "I'm sorry then, miss all mysterious. How would you prefer me to address you as? I wonder… does Margo work? Or maybe Shane?"

The blonde chuckles, throwing her hand on her forehead clumsily. She's confused.

"Well, wouldn't you like to know?" A simple question, but it throws Catra off-board gravely.

The girl frowns. "I'm trying to be mysterious and sexy. You sure aren't helping."

"Well, sorry to break it to you, but you're failing both." Catra fakes a smile, tilting to head her one side.

This time, it was the blonde's turn to scoff. She twirls the end of her ponytail lazily for a while, then turns and strides towards Catra. She swiftly backs her against the wall and Catra feels her breath hitch in her throat. Their faces are inches away from each other. She could just lean in and kiss her, right then and there, there was that. But much to her disappointment, the girl pulls away and extends her hand out to her like she's going to ask for cash or something.

“Give me your phone.” She says, ponytail still swaying. (it’s more of a demand, really.)

Catra digs her hand in her pocket to give it to her, then stops and narrows her eyebrows at the girl suspiciously. “Why?”

The girl rolls her eyes, then steps forward and snatches the phone out of Catra’s hand.

“Hey! That’s mine!” Catra swabs and shoots lame attempts at taking the phone back, but it’s so out of reach, and each time she tries, the blonde’s hand pushes her away. She sees her type something on her phone for a few seconds, then she hands it back to her.

Catra stares at her phone for a minute. She clicks into contacts and notices a new contact added. Adora , it reads, with a little rainbow emoji added beside it.

The girl’s eyes follow every movement Catra makes, squinting her eyes or narrowing them once in a while as she watches.

“Adora? That’s your name?” Catra looks up from her screen, holding her phone out for her to see.

The blonde shrugs. “Take it or leave it.”

“No, it’s… pretty.”

Catra assumes that the compliment works because Adora ’s face suddenly pipes into a shade of crimson red. Catra stares, attempting and failing to hide a laugh that rumbles at the back of her throat.

She looks down at her watch. It’s almost the end of class. If they run now, they can make it back around four to five minutes. On the other hand, they can also stay and make the most of these last few minutes. Class doesn't really matter anyway.

But before Catra can even make a decision, Adora walks out.

"I guess I'll see you tomorrow in class, Catra ." She says, swaying her hips side-to-side and waving her hands in the air behind her as she exits.

She lets out a small breath, a gasp. And that exact moment, right there and right then, is when Catra knows she's fucked.
