Summary

"Catra, please, please listen." Adora whispered, her hand released Catra's wrist in favour of carding through her wild curls instead, tucking some behind her ears.
"Listen to me, do you know why I love October?" Catra scoffed out a laugh.

Kinktober 2023 - Day 12: Chaste Kiss

Notes

Kinktober 2023 - Day 12: Chaste Kiss

title from: we fell in love in october - girl in red

The sun was setting in an impressive array of oranges and pinks, the wider sky still a light blue, white clouds painted pink and lilac. A cold breeze was chasing orange and brown leaves across the roof. Some of them crunched under Catra's heavy boots as she made her way to the edge. It was eerily quiet as she gazed out over the tall trees surrounding the abandoned building. Taking in a deep breath, the air smelled like rain and decay – on the exhale she screamed as loud as she could. She choked on her scream as she ran out of air and let herself fall back onto one of the protruding air vents. It gave a hollow sort of thunking sound before the world was plunged into eerie silence again. Catra felt the wind pull on her hair, cut into her eyes causing a hot tear to streak down her cheek, freezing the wet skin. Her mind was scarily empty, long suppressed emotions threatening to overspill and crawl up her throat, enter the world as tears and screams and hateful words. But then there were those she couldn't acknowledge so quickly – the soft wails of a child abandoned, the gentle words of a lovestruck fool. She didn't have time for this. No time for the wild beast of feeling clawing its way up her legs, digging into her stomach in painful jabs, carving into her chest, her lungs, stealing her breath, only to dig into the space behind her eyes to force out the saltwater of tears she hadn't wanted to spill.

The metallic click and clank of the roof door opening startled her out of her stupor, but she didn't need to turn to know who it was. The wind carried her soft scent to Catra's nose, she wrinkled it against the floral musk and wished the only thing she could smell was the wet decay of the autumn leaves.

"Here you are," Adora's voice was soft, and it ripped at the carefully woven seams of Catra's heart – she wanted to give in to her so badly, almost viscerally.

“Here I am,” she spat back, voice harsh where Adora’s was soft.

“I was looking for you.” Catra could hear the fond smile in her voice; hated herself for how well she knew the other girl. “Knew you’d be up here.” Catra scoffed.

“I’m leaving.” She pushed up and turned, finally facing Adora – and immediately wished she hadn’t. Adora was everything she wasn’t. Soft, straight strands of blonde hair framing her pale, smooth skin; her grey-ish blue eyes were wide and open and Catra saw so much vulnerability in them, she wanted to cave and cry and scream and-

“Please,” Adora’s voice was so soft, the wind almost carried the words away unheard. “Don’t go. Let’s talk.” That startled a cruel laugh out of Catra.

“Talk?” She could see the hurt in Adora’s eyes. “Talk about what? About how you’re fucking leaving?” Adora flinched. “Or how fucking Kyle snitched on me and now you know,” Catra hated how her voice suddenly sounded too wet, stained with unshed tears. “You know and you’re leaving and you don’t care.”

“Catra, that’s not tr-”

“Don’t you dare.” Catra cut her off with a hiss. “Don’t you dare say it’s not true. I saw your face when he said it.” Catra’s fists were clenched so tightly, her tanned skin was white around the knuckles, blood rushing through her veins in rage.

"I was just caught off guard, I didn't know-" Catra laughed again. If she didn't, she knew she'd break down and cry; lose the battle against the beast.

"Fuck that." Adora flinched again at her harsh tone; inwardly Catra winced. "Fuck that and fuck this. I'm going – guess I'll never see you again, right?" She pushed past Adora to reach the door. The eerie silence had fallen again and Catra loved it, she hated it. The silence meant Adora was quiet, the silence meant Catra had been right and Adora didn't fucking care. But then there was a warm hand wrapped around her wrist and Catra found her body whirling around like a falling leaf, eyes wide as they stared at Adora. Her face was flushed red with anger.

"Let go." Catra hissed.

"No." Adora stood tall, eyes aflame with determination. Catra wanted to punch her – so she did. Adora did not duck in time. Catra's fist hit her square in the cheek, pale skin immediately darkening. Not wasting a second of Adora's surprise, Catra reached back and swung her leg out to sweep her legs. Adora was quicker though, always was, and she jumped over Catra's attacking leg, her hand still wrapped tightly around her wrist which she pulled. Catra briefly lost her balance but it was enough. Adora manoeuvred them so that Catra was suddenly gently cushioned on the cold metal of the roof, one of Adora's hands cradling the back of her head to prevent injury, the other pinning her hand to the ground, her legs bracketing her thighs so she couldn't move.

“Fuck off.” Catra screamed and struggled against her hold, but Adora was stronger.

“Please, please calm down.” Catra screamed again. Screamed at how unfair this was, screamed at the world, screamed at Adora, screamed at the beast of emotions clawing its way up her body again but this time stopping and burrowing into her treacherous heart.

“Let me go, let me go.” Her screams faded into sobs as she screwed her eyes shut against the unfairly, heavenly image of Adora crouching above her.

“Catra, please, please listen.” Adora whispered, her hand released Catra’s wrist in favour of carding through her wild curls instead, tucking some behind her ears.

“Listen to me, do you know why I love October?” Catra scoffed out a laugh.

“What the fuck does that have to do with anything?” But the words died slowly on her lips as she looked at Adora who was looking at her with a look so full of… soft things. She wasn’t used to it, not sure how to address the whirlpool of emotion in Adora’s open, promising eyes.

“Wanna know why I love autumn?” Her voice was soft like the falling leaves, and Catra wanted to jump in so badly. But she stayed silent stubbornly.

“Remember last year, when we came here to look at the stars?” Catra didn’t respond but the memories played in her head like a movie reel – soft blankets, cold food, hot tea, wind bringing the smell of decay just like it did today, but the sky was clear and dark and filled with sparkling stars like shimmering gems.

“We lay right here, but I was next to you, not having to restrain you, because you asked me out here.” Catra tilted her head back to stop the tears from spilling, to look away from the girl above her with the soft eyes and the soft smile.

“And I thought, this is it.” Catra squeezed her eyes closed, her hands were limp and no matter how much she wanted to lift them tp push Adora away, get away from the situation, she just… couldn’t. The beast had curled up hot and heavy on her chest, her heart was pounding hard and fast, her breath was trapped.

“This is it for me. You’re it for me.” Catra wanted to cry. “This is my whole world, right here, on this old, abandoned roof where we used to play as kids. and I’ve always had to look at you from so close but you always felt so far away at the same time and I just had this thought,” Adora’s fingers trailed gentle paths of burning flame down Catra’s temple to her cheek, to land light and hot on her jawline.

“No matter how long it takes or what I have to do, you will be my girl.” A tear carved its way hot and painful down Catra’s cheek. “You’ll be my whole world. My girl.”

“Fuck you.” Catra wanted to scream it, hiss it, make her see that she hated her but the words came out soft and soggy, tears staining her voice, the only emotion exhaustion.

“I fell in love with you long before I think but that’s when I knew. I knew it in my whole being, Catra, please, please look at me.” The insistent pressure of her fingers on her jaw and the heavy, wet splash of something hitting her cheek made Catra finally open her eyes. Adora’s eyes were glassy with tears, her grey ocean of iris swimming in a sea of tears and Catra found herself raising a hand to wipe them away.

“Don’t cry,” she found herself saying as Adora’s tears stuck to the pads of her fingers, rolling down the length of them.

“Then please, please tell me you can forgive me.” Adora’s voice was wrecked now too. The sky beyond her was still pink and purple but the dark blue of night was chasing the colours away. Some of the stars were starting to sparkle in the vast nothingness.

“The stars will be out again soon.” Catra said instead and Adora let her head fall to hit Catra’s shoulder. She could feel the tears soaking into her shirt and, giving into her urges, she raised her arms to envelop her in them, keep her warm and safe. She nuzzled her face into Adora’s neck, her hair was warm and smelled like rosemary; Catra smiled.

“But you’re leaving.” She whispered; Adora buried deeper into the crook of her neck.

“I could stay.” The words were pressed into Catra’s neck. “Or you could come with me? We can figure it out, right?” The beast had disappeared, in its stead a kitten lay curled around Catra’s heart, and she couldn’t find it in her to conjure it again. Emotions be damned.

“Guess so.” Adora pulled back at her whispered words, a wet smile on her face, her eyes still spilling over with tears.

“You mean it?” Catra rolled her eyes.

“No.” But Adora had always been able to see right through here, so Catra melted into it when Adora’s arms wrapped around her, pulled her up into a seating position to hug her properly, warm and safe and – loved.

“Let’s wait for the star again.” Adora’s hot breath hit Catra’s ears, and she shivered. They lay back down, this time next to each other, just like they’d done the year prior and they stared at the sky until it was midnight black and the stars were bright in their constellations.

“Catra?” Catra hummed, eyes staring up unwaveringly. “Will you be my girl?” Adora’s voice was hushed as if she was afraid of what Catra might say – as if she had a choice.

“Duh,” Catra said around her smile and leaned up on her elbow to lean over Adora for a second. “I’ll be your girl.” She echoed and leaned in close to press a chaste kiss to Adora’s lips. The blonde hummed into it happily, eyes falling closed and Catra wanted to laugh mockingly at her soft, blissed out expression but she couldn’t find it in her. So she fell back down, eyes turned up towards the celestial bodies and a soft smile played around her lips when she felt Adora’s fingers lace with her own.
