Notes

Enjoy something short and fluffy because sometimes we all need something short and fluffy.
Thank you to Amitola12 as always for being the nicest truthful and educating Beta ever. If this fic is any good…it's because I had a lot of help! If you hate it….it's all my fault.

As always, artwork is my own.

@TaraTeacher3

Catra wiped her hands with a satisfied grin and a pleased flick of her tail. She stood back to admire her set-up, hands tucked into the pockets of her overall shorts; a crisp, white tent covered two pens of young buff Orpington chicks, one of baby turkeys, and a single, sweet silkie rooster Catra was hoping to find a good home as someone's pet. Next to the assortment of fowl was a table of her own artwork and a cooler full of eggs for sale. A dozen jars of raw honey from her own hives completed the scene, spread out on the table and glistening like liquid amber in the rising sunlight.

It was the first monthly chicken swap and farmer's market of the season and a beautiful spring day at that. She pulled her hair back in a pony tail and brushed the straggling strands behind her large, expressive ears. Catra was excited to try and walk away a success after her first full year of owning her own small farm, Halfmoon Acres. At 32 years old, she was happy to say she was officially a cottagecore lesbian now.

When she had first been taken in by the last of a string of foster homes, the country life had been a bit of a shock. She had moved in with Razz when she was 15. Catra couldn't remember her birth family and had been quickly dumped into the foster system. She spent years moving from house to house, removed because of her "behaviors" and dropped off at yet another place; 10 homes in just 12 months was not unusual after she started middle school. Magicats were active children and most foster parents were used to human kids and were overwhelmed by her and her anger at what life had thrown her. If she was lucky, the home was indifferent, but sometimes she lived through horrors. Finally after one family locked her in her room after punching a hole in the wall, her social worker came and took her away for the final time. She had been lucky, Razz had been taking in foster kids for a number of years before Catra came to stay with her, and the wonderful older woman knew just how to help traumatised kids who needed her. Catra's social worker promised her that she was going to love it there.

Catra had come with a black garbage sack of clothes, a pile of anger, and not much else. She had never been outside of the city and the quiet unnerved her. Razz swept her up, stuffed her full of pie, and made the magicat feel special for the first time in her life. She followed the older woman and her full time farm helper Huntara, until she knew how to do everything on the farm herself. She took to country life like a duck to water. The simple act of hard labor that resulted in rewarding results helped tame her anger and calm her spirit. That combined with therapy helped the magicat become the person she was today. Catra had gone away to university so she would have the skills to make a living, but she was home and running her own minifarm after a few years in the city earning the higher salary she had needed to get started. Razz teased her for not bringing home someone with her, but Catra just never found anyone beyond a short affair here and there. Maybe she would find love and maybe she wouldn't, but either way, her little farm was a success and she was excited to see how today would go.

An hour in and she had sold half of the fowl, all of the eggs, and she was down to just 3 pints of honey. She even sold a painting. She was quite pleased really. To keep from pacing, excited by her success, Catra absently let the silkie rooster in her lap. Didn't hurt to also show off what a good pet bird he was. Her tail still flicked rapidly as the crowds ebbed and flowed around her tent. She was never a huge fan of being surrounded by strangers, but she kept the smile on her face and her ears pricked forward. She allowed children to pet her soft, happy chicken and encouraged people to ask questions and take cards if they wanted eggs next week. The crowd faded back a minute and she took a deep breath, only to hear loud giggling and an excited squeal from a new small group approaching her spot.

There was a squeal of delight as a short, pink haired blur of a woman dashed from place to place. Catra couldn't help but admire her delightful curves. She was dragging a tall muscular, dark skinned man around with her to examine the baby chickens and from their matching pink and purple blouses, Catra got the hint to appreciate from a distance. Clearly a couple.

The man cooed at the chicks and they both crouched down to baby talk at the birds. Catra shook her head. City slickers for sure. "Try not to scare the babies there Sparkles." She quipped to the strangers. They ignored her completely, too caught up in the cuteness to pay her any mind.

The last person in the trio walked over to the art and began to flip through the stack of watercolors. Catra turned away from the murmuring chick admirers to the most beautiful person she had ever laid her eyes on. She was tall, with long blonde hair pulled back in a ponytail with a stupid poof in the front holding back her bangs, and stormy light grey eyes that twinkled as she gazed at the art. Catra forgot to breathe for a moment and completely missed the question that was thrown at her.

"I'm sorry?" She said with a head shake.

The blonde smiled softly. "I asked if this was your work. It's very beautiful."

“Oh, yes, uh thanks. Yeah, they’re mine.” Catra stumbled through the reply, pink cropping up between the dusting of freckles across her cheeks and nose. The other woman nodded appreciably and continued to review the prints. Even though she hadn’t asked, Catra still found herself explaining. “I raised the birds and the honey is from my hives as well. My card. If you want.” She awkwardly gestured towards the small stack of business cards showing the address and phone number of the modest farm she called home. Catra never imagined doing tours, but she could be persuaded if the right people showed interest… “It’s not far from here.”

“What isn’t?” The woman replied absently, eyes flicking across the pastel colors, examining them thoughtfully.

“My farm.” Catra could kick herself. Of course this person didn’t care that much; she was browsing. Catra should be going in for the sale, not trying to fumble her way through unwanted small talk.

“Oh, yes! Of course.” Steel blue eyes pulled away from the art, kind and now focused on the creator. They lit up when the woman registered the soft, white rooster clucking in Catra’s lap. Without hesitation, she took a step forward and crouched down to the bird’s level for a better look. “May I pet your chicken?”

Catra coughed, forcing her lungs to resume spreading oxygen through her system. But the blonde… on her knees… Right in front of her… This woman could pet her chicken any day.

Catra shook off the intrusive, lewd thoughts and got a hold of her gay self. "Of course. His name is Kyle. He's too sweet for my flock and the other chickens harass him. I'm hoping he finds a home as a pet. He'd do well with only a friend or two." Catra held out her hand to guide the blonde on the best way to pet the soft fluffy white feathers. Satisfied at how quickly the woman picked up the motion, Catra reluctantly removed her hand. She'd never been jealous of a chicken before, but there was a first time for everything…

"Oh," whispered the grey eyed woman, full of wonder. "He's so soft." She continued to pet the bird, giggling softly as the downy feathers trickled in between her fingers. "It's nice to meet you Kyle, my name is Adora."

Kyle clucked and closed his eyes in avian contentment. Catra smiled at the sight of Adora, fully engaged with the fluffy rooster. Her bird was happy, her potential customer was happy, and Catra was happy at the opportunity to really look at this beautiful woman. Adora clearly worked out or played sports, given how tight her short sleeved button down fit across her biceps, not to mention how her thighs bulged as she knelt on the ground to coo at Kyle some more. Catra didn't usually go for sports, but she would not mind watching whatever this woman clearly played.

With a burst of laughter and flurry of movement that caused Kyle to squawk, Adora's two companions sashayed their way over and grabbed Adora by the arm. "Come on!" They demanded. "We have to go meet Aunt Casta for brunch and we're gonna be late." Adora finally looked up into Catra's face and her eyes widened in surprise. She blinked slowly, her cheeks growing pink, as she broke into a wide smile and started to get up without reaching down to touch the ground. Catra could only imagine what her abs must look like if she had the core strength to do that so fluidly.

"Thank you for letting me pet your Kyle, ummm…?" She faded off and cocked her head to the side, waiting for an answer to her implied question.

"Catra. My name is Catra." She threw her best beaming grin, complete with a flash of fang.

"Catra." The name fell off the woman's lips, sweeter than all the honey in Catra's hives. Had Kyle not clucked impatiently, demanding comfort after the small uproar, Catra might have melted off her chair at those two remarkable syllables coming from Adora's mouth. "Thank you again."

And with that, Adora and her loud companions flew off and left Catra sitting back with a long deep sigh. Just her luck, the most beautiful woman she had ever seen in this one horse town, and she didn't even give her her number. Cottagecore lesbian? How about useless lesbian… She was going to be single forever.

Catra put Kyle back into his pen and stood to stretch. She paced for a moment, before moving to tidy up her booth. She could beat herself up later when there wasn't a chance of scaring off customers. Maybe she needed to put up a sign advertising herself too. A nice big poster right next to her eggs prices; 'Single woman. Looking for a cottegecore wife, has land and baby goats. Will mow the grass and catch all house spiders.' Catra laughed at herself and her own dumb thoughts, ignoring the trace of disappointment left in their wake. Well… Adora could always come back next month, right?

The magicat sighed and sat back down.

An hour or so passed without much excitement. Then one of Catra's old frenemies from high school approached with a large handsome fellow at her side. She perked up and waved a greeting. "Lonnie."

"Back in town for good, eh, Cat?" The short woman ignored her wave, though her smile wasn't unkind. "Perfuma mentioned it. She also said I could come see you about a rooster."

Catra lifted her eyebrows in surprise. Why in the world would Lonnie want a chicken… And wow, 'Fuma, way to spread Catra's business. She shook off her mild irritation, sure her willowy neighbor meant no real harm. "What kind of rooster?"

"Rogelio and I have a little spot out near the state park and we have a trio of silkie hens. I stopped by her booth, hoping to find leads on a rooster, and Perfuma said you were the one to see." Lonnie put her hands on her hips. "They're our pets and the best of 'em, so I don't want some nasty thing you're just trying to dump. I trust 'Fuma, but don't stick with me with some bird that will claw up my legs, okay?"

Even in spite of the unnecessary sass, Catra lit up. This was the perfect set up for Kyle and was exactly what she had been hoping for. “Calm down, already. I don’t “dump” my birds on anyone. But yeah, you’re in luck.”

She introduced the couple to the tiny rooster and watched them melt as they took turns holding him and petting his fluffy feathers. For his own part, Kyle cooed like a dove and snuggled down into their arms. Minutes later, they two left with their new pet and Catra was satisfied that it was a good match for everybody. Those three deserved each other.

The swap was just about over and it was about time to wrap things up for the day when Perfuma herself strolled over with a basket under one arm. She was loaded down with the homemade breads and baked goods that she sold at her table. “Good Afternoon, Catra. How were sales today?” She glanced at the nearly empty pens and small number of honey jars left on the table. “Looks like you have done really well! I’m so happy for you. Anything interesting happen this morning?” A willowy arm reached over and snatched up the last of the honey jars. She placed her basket down and motioned to Catra to dig in.

Catra eagerly plucked out some bread and pastries as part of the deal they had agreed to over the phone last week. Catra loved to cook, but she wasn’t much of a baker. She stuffed half a danish into her mouth and hummed in happiness at the taste. “Yeah.” She swallowed her bite down and replied. “Met some nice local folks and a few ‘petting zoo’ visitors who were clearly from out of town. No way they had ever seen a live chicken before in their life.” Catra chuckled at the excitable city slickers, pit of her stomach glowing at the memory of a certain one.

“Oh?” Perfuma batted her eyes down at Catra. “Anyone in particular stick out?”

Catra looked back, instantly suspicious. “Why?”

“Oh, no reason, really.” Perfuma said breezily as picked up an extra danish and took a bite herself. She chewed thoughtfully, Catra’s jaw clenching tighter with every passing second. Perfuma was enjoying this, Catra just knew it.

The magicat kept a hold of herself and Perfuma finally put her out of her misery. “It’s just that I invited some of my old college friends to come visit today and I know they were walking around. I wondered if perhaps amongst the crowds…someone stuck out to you.” Her lips twitched into a smile. Yeah. Definitely enjoying herself too much here. “They came back to say goodbye before heading off into town to meet someone and my one friend might have mentioned something.”

Catra coughed, the danish now stuck in her suddenly dry throat. Her tone was guarded as the friends continued to dance around one another. Catra pretended to think for a moment. “ Well...there were these two idiots in matching purple clownsuits that were dying over the baby chicks.”

Perfuma giggled. “That sounds like Gimmer and Bow. And was anyone else with them?”

Catra sighed at the fluttering eyelashes and coy smile. “Just say it, hippie girl. Yes, there was a blonde goddess with them. She introduced herself to my chicken.” Catra’s face burned with heat and her tail lashed behind her in agitation. Finally she mumbled, “Adora.”

Perfuma gave a satisfied smirk and reached over to place a hand over Catra’s own. “That’s the one. She was very excited to meet you. I think she was nervous about asking if I knew you.”

“So is she umm… I mean, you know….” Was Adora single? Gay? Catra’s thoughts raced with questions she didn’t want to speak out loud. She looked down and to the side quickly, ears pinning back with nerves.

“Scorpia and I are hosting a cookout tonight.” Perfuma said, ignoring the fumbling question. “Just a few friends will be over, very casual. Why don't you join us? Around 6?” Perfuma didn’t wait for an answer. She gathered her things and walked away with a friendly wave. “See you there.”

Catra stood perfectly still and watched her go, her mind already whirling with questions about what she was going to wear tonight. Maybe she wouldn’t need that sign on her booth after all.

Chapter Summary

A cookout. A group of friends. A proper flirt. And most importantly…Kyle is still a chicken.

Chapter Notes

Welcome back to the country where cottagecore farmer Catra and Adora get to know each other a bit better.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Glimmer's Aunt was a lot of fun really. She was animated and charismatic, her hands thrown up in the air as she talked incessantly. She had been chattering about a vacation to some country that Adora had already forgotten the name of and the many attractions that she enjoyed, Adora had truly lost track of the conversation a while ago...her thoughts going back to that parking lot. Glimmer had lured her there with the promise of a chance to pet a baby goat. (Which had not happened sadly. Who knew the goats would sell out the minute the market opened) But she could not be disappointed, not after meeting one of the most beautiful people she had ever laid her eyes on. Just wow. She melted in her chair a bit.

Adora had been instantly lost in those eyes. One like a tropical oasis, cool and deep as the ocean. The other like the sun during the golden hour of sunset, sparkling with intelligence, all glowing under those long lashes. Her face had been scattered with freckles, forming constellations across her warm tan cheeks and adorable nose. Adora had found herself adrift in that face. Flashes of what it would be like to wake up to that every morning caused her heart to pick up speed. To reach over and kiss that cute speckled nose, run her fingers through the waterfall of chestnut curls, oh to be wrapped in those soft furred arms...

Oh.

Adora blinked away her thoughts and focused on the conversation around her. Now Glimmer was chattering about some new outfit she had found while thrifting. She'd been so excited about it at the time. Something about a famous designer and it being vintage (and in her size!) … Aunt Casta seemed enthralled. Bow was nodding along encouragingly. Adora pretty quickly started woolgathering again. She couldn't believe she forgot to grab a card. She had no way of knowing where Catra lived, to make an excuse to come out and spend more time around her, fresh eggs the sign had said. Adora loved eggs. She sighed, useless lesbian. She didn't even know if Catra was single or hell, even if she was queer.

Perfuma seemed excited when Adora asked if she knew the magicat. Maybe she should ask her more at the cookout tonight, if she could get away from Glimmer for a minute. Because if Glimmer knew she might have even the hint of the beginning of a crush… well, she would be insufferable about it. She was always heckling Adora about needing to get out there more.

But that was just not fair. Adora had been trying. For years now. It just never seemed to work out beyond a few dates or a quick dalance. Adora was a lot. She had certainly been told that enough times by ex's at this point. Romantic partners always faded away once they realised her anxiety doesn't just magically go away. She would try so hard to make up for it in any way she could by giving and giving of herself until she forgot who she was in an effort to be needed. It was too much. She was too much, always.

Adora would lay awake until the wee hours of the morning with her heart aching, knowing that finding someone who could look past her faults seemed more hopeless as the years passed by. Her heart sank. It just didn't seem worth trying anymore sometimes. She had once again deleted all the dating apps on her phone and resigned herself to a lonely life. What was the point, she could not stomach the same old beginning conversations, only to watch the person fade away. Again.

A warm hand rested on her arm, she shook out the cobwebs and looked over to the soft eyes of Bow. "Still with us Adora?" he said softly. "You looked a million miles away."

Adora smiled at him. He cared so much. She genuinely loved him and Glimmer. They were the only steady people in her life these days and Bow in particular could pull her out of a spiral better than anyone ever had. Her racing heart was already slowing down.

"Yeah. Thanks Bow."

He gave her arm a squeeze in reassurance.

"Perfuma just sent a text to the group chat. Seems like she invited another person to the cookout tonight and wanted to be sure we were still coming over. Old friend of hers from school. The woman with that cute white chicken. Catra."

Adora's heart might have stopped.

Glimmer held up another compression shirt from Adora's luggage and frowned. "Do you have anything in here besides gym clothes? Geeze Adora. Don't you know how vital it is to keep something nice ready in case you meet a hot chick?" She looked up into Adora's face with exasperation and went back to digging around, mumbling mainly to herself now. "None of this is going to do at all…. Shopping maybe, but what in this town…. Borrow something from Scorpia… no...too big even for your big hulking biceps …. " Glimmer walked out of the room, still muttering to herself. Adora stood there and watched her go.

It wasn't her fault. This was just supposed to be an exploratory long weekend, a chance to see the area, look at some housing she had seen online, not meet anyone. Besides, she felt comfortable in her clothing and if being in something fancy was what attracted someone to her, well they would be disappointed later anyway. Why set expectations too high? Adora picked up her favorite red sleeveless gym shirt and the khaki cargo shorts and paired them with her birkenstocks. Good enough. She had a new theory on life after her last failed relationship… be yourself. She loved Glimmer, but wearing something new or something that wasn't hers, well old Adora had done plenty of that. Time to try just deciding that she was enough. She was going to stop letting herself get worked up about this and just… be. She grabbed her things and a towel and headed for the shower.

They arrived only about 15 minutes late, practically a record for Glimmer. Once Adora got her off the mindset of helping her get dressed, Glimmer was able to pull herself together pretty quickly, once again, she and Bow matched. This time she had somehow found a sundress and Hawaiian style shirt with the same fabric. Adora didn't know if she had them custom made, she wasn't sure she really wanted the answer. Bow just rolled his eyes with a giant smile and wrapped his arm around his shorter girlfriend's shoulder. "You look good babe." he said with a kiss on the top of her head.

It had been so nice of Perfuma and Scorpia to have them over tonight. Adora had been looking forward to it even before finding out there would be an additional guest. She loved Scorpia and it had been too long since they had had a nice evening just to relax and hang out. They walked into the backyard together, Glimmer with Bow in tow heading straight to the hostess's to say hi. Adora made a beeline for the coolers and grabbed a Jack Daniels watermelon punch. She might need it to relax enough to get through tonight without looking like a total idiot.

Bottle in hand, Adora headed over to join her friends. Scorpia practically bulldozed her way over and lifted Adora into a spinning hug. Over her shoulder, Adora noticed the handsome magicat standing behind them. The woman winked and lifted her beer in salute when their eyes met. Scorpia dropped her back to the ground.

“I’m so glad to see you. Thank you for coming over!” She exclaimed in her excited ‘outdoor voice’.

Adora laughed. “I’m glad to see you, too big gal. How are you?”

“Wonderful. I can’t even tell you how happy I am these days. Getting out of the city did wonders for my soul. I hear you are thinking of moving to the area too huh? Perfuma said you were looking at some places this weekend?” Scorpia took a deep breath and waited. Catra’s ears perked up in the background, clearly catching what Scorpia had said. Adora bit her lip and scratched at the back of her neck.

“Yeah.” she said quietly.

Glimmer jumped in with the story. “Adora’s doctor recommended she get out of the city and find a slower pace of life. And while we really are sad she might be going so far, it’s only a day trip and a great excuse to spend a weekend out of the city to visit regularly! I am making her look for at least two bedrooms so we have our own room. Getting too old for a couch pull out you know! Plus she already has a few friends here, right Scorpia? And maybe...” Glimmer looked over to Catra and smiled. “Maybe she can meet some new ones too.” Adora huffed.

“You make it sound like something out of Edwardian England, as if I’m going out to the countryside for my health. I swear I don’t have tuberculosis.” Adora laughed at her own stupid joke and managed to snort, just adding a cherry on top of exposing herself for the dork she was. “I am looking forward to the fresh air and oh...seeing stars every night!" she continued. "Sometimes I wonder if the lack of food delivery will be worth it, I might have to actually learn to cook or I might starve to death." She snorted again. "But really, I just want peace and quiet and a chance to maybe have a little garden and fire pit."

"Found a job locally yet?" Perfuma asked as she walked over and tucked an arm around her beloved's waist.

"I have an interview on Monday. The timing couldn't be better really. The local library director just retired and they are looking for someone to take over. I feel pretty good about my chances."

Catra walked up closer to the group and flashed a toothy grin. "Library nerd, huh?" Her grin faded a bit. "Moving out here doesn't bother your… partner or whatever." Catra's tail flicked as she took a long swig of her beer.

Adora blushed and turned to Glimmer for support. "My ex-girlfriend here is encouraging me to get a 2nd bedroom so she can crash with the dude she snatched up after our two week relationship fizzled. And of course my dog will be thrilled to get a yard out of the deal. Those are the only ones who matter these days." Adora tipped back her own drink and polished it off.

"I'm going to grab another drink, can I get you another Adora?" Catra held out her hand for the empty bottle.

"Actually… can I come with you?" Adora asked. Scorpia's face lit up and she opened her mouth to say something, only stopping when Perfuma gave her waist a squeeze and stared at her pointedly. Catra nodded at Adora and the two walked off towards the coolers.

"Honestly, I am a bit hungry too, wanna grab a burger and sit for a minute?" Catra asked as they walked out of earshot of their friends. Adora nodded just as her stomach rumbled loudly, it had been a while since brunch and she really was starving. Catra bent over the cooler and reached up to hand Adora another punch, then grabbed one for herself, then the two headed over to the grill and made their dinner. Adora piled on the toppings for her burger and added a scoop of potato salad to her plate. She looked over at the beautiful magicat to see she had taken some of the grilled shrimp skewers and made a po'boy out of them. Mmmm why didn't she think of that. Adora shrugged. Her burger still looked amazing. She added a slice of cheese and an extra tomato and the two of them headed over to a swinging bench under a large oak tree.

They dug in and ate without saying much. Adora was practically humming as she ate. She loved food. Truly loved it. She was so thankful she loved working out just as much or she would be as fat as one of Catra's chickens. It wasn't long before they were both leaning back and groaning in satisfaction. Adora turned and looked at the beautiful woman sitting next to her.

"So umm, how is Kyle?" She said a bit too casually.

Catra chuckled. "I found him the perfect home. He will have his own little harem. And they will spoil him rotten. I would not be surprised to hear he gets banana waffles everyday for breakfast."

“I didn’t know chickens could have banana waffles.”

“Oh it’s probably not going to be a long life...but it will be a fat and happy one.”

“I might have to have a couple of pet chickens once I’m settled. He was almost the cutest thing I’ve ever seen.” Adora suddenly clammed up and turned to look back towards the others, hoping Catra could not see how red her face had become.

Catra shifted and laid her hand onto the bench, only a few inches away from Adora’s leg. “Maybe you can come by my place for some pointers and uh, I can let you pick out a couple when you are ready.”

Adora glanced down and then swallowed. With a burst of bravery, she settled her hand next to Catra’s, their hands touching slightly.

“I’d like that.”

Catra leaned over and lifted her other hand. “You have a little something on your face, ya dummy.” Her thumb brushed slowly against the corner of Adora’s mouth and she was pretty sure her heart stopped beating. She pursed her lips and sighed.

“Thank you.” she whispered.

Catra leaned over further and looked down at Adoras lips, then back up to her eyes. “May I?” she asked, her voice going husky.

Adora nodded rapidly like the dork she was but before Catra could laugh at her enthusiasm, the blonde closed the gap and tilted her head down to kiss her first. Her hand reached out to cover Catras own, which flipped over, allowing their fingers to entwine together. She sucked gently at Catra’s lower lip and the woman moaned quietly. Adora was soring, heat building as her world narrowed down to nothing but those lips.

Her bliss was shattered quickly though when a wolf whistle cut through the haze and she heard Bow telling Glimmer to shut up. Catra squeezed her hand and cackled. “Nice job there Sparkles. It was just getting interesting.” Adora’s face was on fire and it wasn’t the only place burning. She looked back into Catra’s incredible eyes and grinned shyly. “Umm, another time maybe?” she paused. “Soon?”

Catra grinned back at her. “Yeah, I’d like that.”

“Ro? Ro? Where are you? Are you sitting with the chickens again?”

The powerfully built woman walked around the corner of their home, looking for her partner, finding him exactly where she figured he would be. Rogelio was curled up as much as he possibly could on a bench next to the coop. There was a fat red fluffy hen on both arms of his chair and a fluffy white rooster in his lap. It was practically cooing as he stroked the feathers with his talons. Lonnie shook her head. Just when she thought she couldn't possibly love the big lug anymore. She glanced around and found the 3rd hen sitting on the roof of the coop watching the besotted reptile and his feathered companions.

Lonnie walked up behind him and reached around to pet their new rooster. "How is he getting along with the girls?" she said very quietly. Rogelio beamed and signed a positive response. "Good." Lonnie sighed. "Makes our family seem complete doesn't it?" Rogelio gave her a happy rumple and they both sat quietly petting Kyle.
