Separation of Work and Private Life

by catrasredemption (dimensionhoppingrose)

Summary

"Fine. So like, are you dating someone, or?..

"If you absolutely must know, I'm married."

Glimmer nearly choked on air. "What?"

"Don't sound so shocked," Catra muttered. "And stop trying to set me up with that blonde nurse."

-OR-

Glimmer has a good intentions for her co-worker and friend. Catra is difficult and private.

Secret Marriage/Fake Enemies at Work AU

Notes

I don't generally write holidays, but Christmas was a convenient excuse for this, and it let me drop an idea I've been lowkey mulling over - Jewish Adora (it's not MUCH, but it's something I want to explore later and getting it in a little bit of something helps)

See the end of the work for more notes

"So, the new nurse is kind of cute."

"Hmn?" Catra looked up from the chart she was reading, meeting Glimmer's gaze. Glimmer was… fine, she supposed, if not entirely too nosy and too invested in Catra's love life.

"The nurse that started in the maternity ward today , Adora. I saw her in the cafeteria. She's cute."

Catra rolled her eyes heavily. "Are you trying to set me up with a nurse you've seen once in passing?"

"I just think she'd be your type."

"I don't have a type." Catra clicked her pen a couple times as she thought, then made a note. "Anyway , I'm not looking to date."

"Well maybe you should be. You never do anything but work and go home—"

"What, are you spying on me?"

"And I'm worried about you."

Catra tended to be a bit stand-offish —she and Glimmer had met during their internship at Bright Moon General, and they had a friendship, but it was mostly one of Glimmer annoying Catra about doing things like remembering to eat and get some sleep. And Glimmer knew a lot of it was an act, and that Catra was secretly soft under all the thorniness. Getting to that part of her was just hard .

"Anyway , I don't work in the maternity ward." Catra paused, chewing on her pen.

"But I do. I can drop a good word about you—"

"Sparkles, I haven't even seen this woman."

"Okay , but you definitely should."

"Should Bow feel threatened?"

It was Glimmer's turn to roll her eyes. She had been dating her now husband since high school. He knew he never had to feel threatened by Glimmer admiring that someone else was attractive. Hell, he had a crush on one of the physical therapists, and Glimmer wasn't worried about that. They were solid.

"Anyway , I've got work to do. Find someone else to set up on blind dates."

Glimmer huffed as Catra walked away, and headed for the elevator to go back up to the fifth floor. The first thing she saw when the doors opened was Bow. Perfect.

"I swear , Catra doesn't appreciate anything I do for her." She cut off abruptly when she saw that Bow had been talking to the new nurse. "Oh. Um...sorry ."

"This is my wife!" Bow said quickly , beaming with pride. "Glimmer , this is Adora, she just started today."

"Hi." Glimmer waved sheepishly . "Sorry , a friend of mine is being really frustrating."

Adora snorted, trying to mask it with a cough. "Trust me, I get that."

"She's really nice, though!" Bow spoke up. He was not trying to wingman for Catra, but he didn't like spreading negativity around, especially in the maternity ward. "And she's great at her job. She was one of the only interns Netossa actually liked and wanted to keep on her team at the end of her internship."

"I'm sure she's great," Adora said with a small smile. She definitely had a better personality, Glimmer thought. Maybe she could still make this work.

"No," Bow groaned. "Glimmer, please—"

"Someone needs to save Catra from herself!" Glimmer insisted, waving her hands. They were on their way home, with Bow driving so Glimmer could rant. "She's going to die with no one but her cat for company at this rate."

"So your suggestion is to set her up with someone who literally just started working here?"

"She's the only person in the hospital who doesn't already know how insufferable Catra is."

Bow sighed. He knew Glimmer really liked Catra, and Catra, for all her stand-offishness, was a fiercely loyal person. She and Glimmer had been working in the ER one night during their internship, and a big guy taking a bad trip tried to grab Glimmer. Catra laid him out in two seconds. That was when Glimmer realized that Catra's way of caring was just different. Because god forbid anyone think she was soft.

And Glimmer worried about her. She knew Catra's family lived a few hours away, and her only friend in the city seemed to be Glimmer (and Bow, by extension). But that wasn't healthy.

And nothing was going to stop her now that she had a plan in the works.

Sometimes, when it was quiet, it was nice to just watch the babies in the nursery. They wanted kids eventually, but Glimmer was very back and forth on the idea of actually getting pregnant. Sometimes she could forget that when she saw the newborns.

"Oh good, baby watching time," Adora said with a sigh as she came up beside Glimmer. "I just ran into the rudest person. Do all doctors think they're better than nurses?"

"Definitely not," Glimmer said quickly. "Did you get a name? I can kick some ass."

"No, I was too busy trying to get out of her royal highness's way." Adora rolled her eyes. "But she had different colored eyes."

There was exactly one doctor in the entire hospital who fit that description. Glimmer bit down a groan. "Oh, that's Catra. It's not personal, she's mean to me, and we've known each other for four years. But she's really nice sometimes too!"

"Sure," Adora said skeptically. Glimmer swore Catra purposely tried to make her life harder.

"Really. We usually get lunch together, why don't you join us? She'll probably apologize for being such a nightmare."

That was definitely not going to happen, but maybe Glimmer could get away and talk to Catra before lunch about at least being on her best behavior.

That ended up not happening. Glimmer just barely got away in time for lunch, sending a silent to prayer to whoever was listening that any more of her patients would wait to go into labor until she'd had a chance to eat. Adora was waiting for her by the nurse's station.

"Crazy day."

"Yeah." Glimmer laughed breathlessly. "Sometimes everyone wants to give birth at once. It'd be really convenient if they could coordinate this stuff better."

"Have you tried telling them that?"

She really was very sweet, Glimmer thought. And kind, and funny. She'd only gotten a chance to work with the new nurse a couple of times in the last two weeks, but she'd been completely kind and professional every time. They'd also stopped to watch babies in the nursery a couple times during quiet moments, and Glimmer could tell just by looking at Adora that she wanted to be a mother. She'd probably be a great one.

Catra was already at the table when Glimmer and Adora arrived. She looked over the top of the book she was reading, scowling. "Oh great, you brought the klutz."

"Wow, hi to you too," Adora shot back. "I said I was sorry."

"Tell that to the scrub top you dumped coffee all over."

"Oooooooookay," Glimmer said quickly, tugging Adora to sit. "Catra, this is Adora. Adora, this is Catra."

"We've met," Catra said shortly, going back to her book.

"There is no way you care that much about the stupid scrub shirt I spilled coffee on."

"No, I care about the third-degree burns you almost gave me. You know you're not supposed to heat it over a hundred and thirty degrees, right?"

"Oh please, you're fine," Adora scoffed. "Stop being such a baby."

Glimmer could only watch helplessly as her plans collapsed in front of her. She did her best not to cry. Maybe Catra really was going to die with just her cat for company. Maybe it was better that way for everyone involved.

"I'm sure there's someone else you can play matchmaker with," Bow assured her later that night. "Scorpia and Perfuma seem like they need some help."

"I guess," Glimmer muttered. "Why does Catra have to be such a stubborn idiot?"

"Because that's just how she is, and we love her for it."

Thanksgiving came and went without too much fuss (for Glimmer, at least;Catra spent at least an hour complaining about some of the people who had come through the ER, and maybe they just shouldnt go see their families if they couldnt resist getting into fistfights or breaking bottles over each other's heads), and just like that, they were looking December in the eye.

The first snowstorm brought with it a a near disaster of a four-car pileup, which ended up keeping Glimmer late one night. She didnt usually work in the ER, but it was all hands on deck.

Catra walked over to the nurse's station after stitching up a kid's head, giving Glimmer an exhausted look.

"I hate snow ."

"You hate everything,"Glimmer said without any heat, flopping over to rest her head on Catra's shoulder.

"I really hate the snow."

Catra's phone buzzed. She dragged herself up to answer it. "Hey… nah, got a car accident right as I was on my way out. Im leaving in a minute. Im really sorry I missed the candles tonight —oh, you didnt have to wait."A small, soft smile played at her lips. "But thanks. Ill be home as soon as I can."

Glimmer raised an eyebrow as catra hung up. "What was that?"

"A phone call."

"Very funny. Who do you even know outside of this hospital?"

"I have a life, Glimmer,"Catra says, giving her a pointed look. "Just because you think all I do is sit in the dark and pet Melog doesnt mean that's actually all I have outside of work."

Okay, maybe Glimmer should have eased up a little on pushing Catra to get out more. But she didn't she could be blamed for being worried. "Fine. So like, are you dating someone, or?…

"If you absolutely must know, I'm married."

Glimmer nearly choked on air. "What?"

"Don't sound so shocked," Catra muttered. "And stop trying to set me up with that blonde nurse."

"Is that what this is about? Fine, no more matchmaking, but you don't have to make up a marriage for that."

Catra gave her an offended look. "I'm not making it up!"

"I've known you for years and you've never even mentioned dating."

"I don't tell you everything about my life. We're not besties, Sparkles, we're coworkers. I'm allowed to keep details to myself if I want to."

She stalked off without another word. Glimmer sighed. Catra wasn't wrong, but only because she purposely seemed to keep everyone at arm's length. And Glimmer was mostly good about respecting her boundaries (certainly better than Scorpia, who liked to pick Catra up and hug her). But she thought she knew a little more about Catra than that. But…

"Catra says she's married."

Bow coughed as he accidentally inhaled some hot cocoa. Those were not the first words he'd expected when his wife walked into the house.

"What?"

"Right?" Glimmer dropped her bag and went to get her own mug — of course Bow had left enough for her. "Can you believe it? Fine, I get it, she doesnt want to be set up with anyone, but telling me she's married? Really?

"It is unbelievable," Bow admitted haltingly. Catra was perfectly nice in her own way, but he found it hard to believe they could work together for four years and the subject of a wife or fiancé or girlfriend would never come up. Had Catra even taken a vacation in the last four years? But do you really think she'd lie?..

"Do you really, honestly believe that Catra would just not mention being married or having a partner for four years?"

It seemed very unlikely. Maybe she just really wanted Glimmer to leave her alone about her personal life. Which was fair. But all she had accomplished now was making Glimmer more curious. Always a dangerous thing.

"Just tell me one thing about your wife. Please?"

"Why are you being so nosy?" Catra grumbled, waving Glimmer off as she tried to focus on her chicken wrap.

"You can't just tell me you're married and then expect me not to ask about it!"

"You're married?" Adora asked in disbelief as she walked by their table. "Who would marry you?"

"Wouldn't you like to know," Catra shot back. Glimmer sighed. The attempt to get them together was always going to fail in light of this news, she supposed. But they'd killed it pretty well on their own, too.

"I just want to know if she's being held against her will."

"Are you two just going to insult each other the entire time we're here?" Glimmer asked, looking between them.

"She started it," Catra argued.

"You started it by existing," Adora argued.

"Wow, very mature, Princess."

Glimmer made a face as Adora turned away and walked off to another table. "Princess?" she repeated, looking at Catra.

Catra shrugged. "She just looks like a princess type, doesn't she? Like everything's been handed to her for her entire life and she's never had to work for anything."

That was kind of an unfair assumption, and Glimmer opened her mouth to say so, but Catra's pager went off. She groaned, shoving the last of her wrap into her mouth and running off.

"You can not ask Scorpia."

"She's the only other person I can think of who Catra would talk to about something like this," Glimmer said simply, ignoring the desperate look on Bow's face.

"Catra clearly doesn't want it getting around."

Glimmer walked into the ER break room, pleased to find Scorpia eating lunch with Perfuma, one of the physical therapists (but not the one Bow had a crush on). "Hey Scorpia! Has Catra ever mentioned being married?"

Scorpia practically jumped, sandwich slipping from her hands. "She's what?"

Perfuma was slightly more graceful. "That is definitely news to us."

"Same!" Glimmer said, exasperated. "And she expects me to just take it and not be curious. Oh yeah, Glimmer, I'm married, here are no details at all about my wife who I've never mentioned before."

"She... might just like her privacy."

"That's what I said!" Bow piped up.

"But we're friends." Scorpia sounded distraught. "How could she not tell me something like this?"

"Tell who what?" Mermista asked as she walked in, heading for the fridge. "And who stole my water?"

"Catra's married!"

Mermista looked back Scorpia, eyes wide. "Who would marry Catra?"

"Okay, that's a little mean," Perfuma scolded Mermista. "Catra is… perfectly nice. In her own way."

"Uh huh." Mermista folded her arms. She was a more recent addition to the staff, having only started six months ago, but Catra was good at making an impression. "Not buying it. Are you sure she wasn't lying to get you off her back about something?"

"No," Glimmer admitted. "That's why I'm asking."

"I think we should leave it be," Perfuma said pointedly. "Obviously Catra wants to keep her work and personal life separate."

That was definitely not going to happen now that Scorpia knew.

Catra, predictably, was not happy. "I can't believe you told Scorpia."

"I was just asking if she knew anything! Since you apparently don't want to talk to me—"

"What's wrong with wanting to keep my relationship out of work?" Catra asked, folding her arms. "We don't all want to go to the same high school, college, and get the same job as our partners for a reason, Sparkles."

"Just give me one thing!"

Catra practically growled, yanking her scrub shirt over her head. "Drop it, okay? I'm sorry I told you."

She stormed out of the locker room without another word.

Glimmer did drop it after that. She felt really bad. She knew how intensely private Catra was about...well, everything. But she felt like something had been dangled in front of her then ripped away. How had she not known this vital thing about a person she considered a friend?

It was nearly a week before Catra tracked Glimmer down, finding her watching the nursery babies.

"I've been informed that I was a little mean to you," she said grumpily, leaning against the railing in front of the window. "And that I shouldn't drop huge bombshells and then not expect people to ask questions."

Glimmer almost smiled. "Did your wife tell you that?"

"Yes, as a matter of fact. She's the one with all the feelings and compassion. It's really annoying sometimes."

"Wow, what a sweet talker you are." Glimmer laughed. "Can't imagine how you picked her up."

"Got lucky, honestly." The smile on Catra's lips was gentle, soft, and nothing like her usual expression, or really any expression Glimmer had ever seen.

"So...do I get to know anything about her?" And the smile was gone. Catra sighed, rolling her eyes. "Just one thing. Please?"

"Fine." Catra frowned, clearly thinking hard. "She's a terrible cook. Really the worst one you'll ever meet. She can't even freeze water right."

"How do you not—"

"She didn't realize the water needed more than an hour to freeze into actual ice cubes. It was a mess." Catra shook her head, sighing heavily. "But I love her."

"Aaaawwww."

Catra shoved Glimmer away. "Shut up or I won't let you meet her."

"Meet her?"

"Yeah, my moms are coming to Bright Moon for Christmas, so we're going to be in town for the residents' holiday party. Thought I'd actually go, ya know?"

This all felt too good to be true. "Are you teasing me?" she asked, pouting.

"See, this is why I can't be sincere with you. You always think I'm lying or being mean."

That wasn't exactly Glimmer's fault, given Catra's history, but she was interrupted by Adora saying, "Oh, are we watching babies?"

Catra made a noise of disgust, turning on her heel and heading for the elevator. She and Adora didn't actually interact much, but they'd made it pretty clear they hated each other. "Wow, she's a charmer," Adora muttered, sticking her tongue out at the closing elevator doors.

"She rubs off on you after awhile," Glimmer said fondly. "Hey, are you doing anything for Christmas? Bow and I have a lot of friends who don't have family or anything nearby so we usually have a party or something."

"Nah, I'm not really a Christmas person," Adora said with a shrug.

"Aw, you're not a Scrooge, are you?"

"Nope, elf-wish." Glimmer winced, and Adora laughed. "It's fine, you're not the first person to that say that. And you don't have to say Happy Hanukkah, it ended a week ago."

Well at least she'd saved Glimmer from shoving her other foot in her mouth. "Well, you're still welcome to come for hot cocoa or something. Bow makes the best."

"Do you guys do Christmas lights?" Adora asked eagerly. "I love driving around to see all of those. Some people go really crazy."

"Yeaaaaaah. Bow's really into that. And this is the first year we've had a house, so..." Glimmer sighed. "He'll figure it out, he has time to get the right set up. But if you've ever been curious about what it would look like if a Christmas light factory exploded, feel free to swing by."

"She's not coming."

Bow sighed. As usual, they'd booked out the back room of Glimer's father's restaurant for the residents' Christmas party. Everyone had broken off into groups at this point, some sitting to eat. Bow would've liked to have been among them, but Glimmer was hovering near the door.

"I'm sure she'll be here. And if she's not, that's okay, right?"

"Right," Glimmer mumbled reluctantly. There'd been some talks about boundaries and respecting Catra's privacy. But she had said she would come and bring her mysterious wife. Glimmer couldn't help it if she was a little excited, and would be disappointed if Catra ditched them.

"Come on, let's get food and sit."

They found a couple open seats with Mermista, Sea Hawk (the physical therapist Bow did have a crush on), Scorpia, and Perfuma. "No sign of Catra or her wife?" Mermista asked with an unnecessary emphasis on the word wife. She fully believed Catra was lying to get Glimmer to leave her alone about her personal life.

"She'll get here when she gets here."

That turned out to be almost twenty minutes later. Glimmer, halfway through her second glass of champagne, had almost forgotten about it when she heard, "Sorry, the roads were terrible. Looked like there was an accident. Really glad I'm not working right now."

Everyone looked up and around at the familiar voice, first seeing Catra – who was wearing a burgundy dress shirt with a pin on it and black pants, hair pulled back in its usual ponytail – and…

"Adora?"

Glimmer blinked a few times to make sure she wasn't hallucinating. Nope, that was definitely the nurse, wearing her hair down and clipped back, the same pin on her white dress shirt. And hanging off Catra's arm.

"Um. what's going on?"

Catra looked at Adora, who shrugged back. "Oh, wait." She snapped her fingers as if realizing something. "Did I forget to mention Adora's my wife?"

"What?" the entire table practically screeched. Catra and Adora kept a straight face for about ten seconds before they burst out laughing.

"That was exactly as good as I thought it would be!" Catra cackled, doubling over as she laughed. Adora was leaning on her shoulder.

"Are you happy now?"

"Yes, all of this has been worth it."

"But. But." Glimmer's brain had completely stalled. Mermista was taking a long sip of wine while Sea Hawk tried to figure out what was going on. Even Bow wasn't managing to hide his shock, and he was usually good at that.

"Okay," Perfuma said slowly. "I think we need a little explanation."

"Right, right." Catra grabbed a couple chairs from an empty table, pulling one up for Adora with a flourish. "M'lady."

"Oh, thank you good sir," Adora teased as she sat. Catra grinned, settling in next to her.

"Where do we start?"

"You guys are married?" Glimmer demanded. "I thought you hated each other!"

"Oh, that." Catra snickered. "We weren't going to mention our relationship anyway, because we work in completely different places and Adora was worried being my wife would influence how you guys looked at her—"

"I still don't think I was wrong about that," Adora said. Catra leaned over to nudge her shoulder.

"And then Glimmer started talking up the hot new nurse on the maternity floor, and how were we supposed to pass up that chance?"

"But you guys argue every time you see each other!"

"That wasn't arguing," Adora protested, reaching for a bread roll in the basket in the middle of the table. "We never said anything mean to each other."

"Actually we never talked much at all because someone can't act to save her life," Catra said pointedly.

"So... did the coffee incident never happen?"

"Oh no, it happened. In undergrad. First day of school, I walk out of the elevator for my first class when this absolute disaster of a human being trips on her own two feet and spills her scalding hot coffee all over my chest."

"I said I was sorry," Adora muttered, sulking. "Multiple times."

"It actually burned me. Not third degree burns or anything, but still."

"And then she spent an hour lecturing me about the dangers of boiling my coffee too hot and went on a long-winded thing about a lady who filed a lawsuit with a fast food place."

"Because she spilled their one hundred and sixty degrees coffee in her lap!"

"Wow, what a first meeting," Mermista managed in some version of her usual bored tone. "Sounds like love at first sight."

"Oh hell no." Catra scoffed. "I was pissed. It was my favorite shirt. Then I found out the damn klutz lived not only in the same building as me, but three doors down—"

"And she started leaving me reasonably heated coffee every morning." Adora's voice was fond. "I almost stepped on it the first time because I didn't see it, and it wasn't like she left a note or anything."

"Which didn't stop you from drinking the mysterious coffee."

Glimmer looked at her husband, then her champagne. She'd only had two glasses, right? "How long have you been together?" Scorpia asked, looking between them. They exchanged glances.

"About ten years?"

"Yeah, somewhere around there. Just got married last year, though. Super lowkey because her parents are ashamed—"

"That isn't true and you know it." Adora elbowed Catra, scolding her lightly. To the rest of the table she said, "My family's kind of..." She waved her hand. "So I changed my last name because I didn't plan on going into the family business and I didn't want to just get opportunities because of who I'm related to." That seemed like a theme. "But my dad's a little...famous, I guess?"

"You guess." Catra snorted. "Tell 'em your full last name, babe."

Adora sighed, giving the table an awkward smile. "Grayskull."

"Grayskull—like, Grayskull Industries?" Bow asked, voice cracking. "Like the number one leader in technology and innovation and the company that drove their last big competitor out of business and the place that makes probably every single phone in Etheria?"

"Yeah, that one." Adora rubbed her neck, blushing slightly. "My brother was more willing to take over the business than I was, so my parents let me go to school and change my name so I could try and make it on my own. And they are not ashamed of me or Catra, but..."

"But being an heiress to a technology empire is a terrible burden," Catra said in a voice full of feigned sympathy. Adora elbowed her again.

"They help me keep things quiet for the sake of my own privacy."

Something clicked in Glimmer's head. "Is this why you called her princess?"

Adora glared at Catra, who groaned. "It slipped! I said I was sorry."

"Of course I can resist teasing you at work, Adora," Adora said in a poor imitation of Catra's voice. "I have self control. I would never slip and accidentally call you a pet name."

"At least I didn't almost tell Glimmer that I hoped my future kid had my wife's beautiful heterochromantic eyes."

Adora blushed. Glimmer groaned, resting her face in her hands. "I can not believe this. Is anything either of you have told us true?"

"Um, we really do have a cat," Catra supplied helpfully. "It's freaking impossible to get a picture of him without Adora in it, though."

"I really do like Christmas lights," Adora added. "And I'm really a wish."

"Her priorities are really in order."

Glimmer pushed away from the table, walking out of the back room, ignoring the others calling her name. Her entire face was burning with embarrassment. The snap of cold air that hit her as she stepped outside helped a little. She leaned against the wall, eyes fixed on the ground. The bell over the door rang a moment later.

"Hey, Sparkles." Catra's voice was surprisingly somber as she leaned against the wall Glimmer, crossing her arms over her chest.

"Are we friends at all?" It felt stupid and immature, but she'd just found out someone she worked with and liked had a whole relationship that she just never mentioned. It hurt.

"Of course we are. I." Catra sighed, running a hand through her hair. "Dating a famous person is really fucking hard. You saw the look on everyone's face. Imagine that everywhere you go for a year when you're not even dating. We were nearly attacked by paparazzi once. It sucked. She knew how I feel about privacy, and she was already in the process of changing her last name when it happened, but she got her parents to get it through the courts quicker after that. We managed to mostly get off radars when I started my internship, and I just... never wanted to ruin that. And I think it was easier for her to go in without anyone expecting anything from her. She was really nervous about starting this job."

Glimmer huffed out a breath of air; it was visible in the cold. "I know how you are. I just... kind of thought I was different. It's stupid."

"It's not." Catra shrugged. "It wasn't just my choice. Adora wanted to keep things quiet too. I can't say I would've been singing her praises around work if she had been okay with it, but I probably would've told you sooner. And we knew when she got the nursing job that we wouldn't be able to keep it a secret forever – like I said, she's a terrible actor – and if you hadn't been so insistent on getting me to date her, I might've told you before we let other people know." She paused, tilting her head a bit. "You know what, though?"

"What?"

"You were right. She's absolutely my type."

Glimmer considered that for a moment, then laughed. "I knew it. It's the muscles, isn't it?"

"Absolutely. Her personality has nothing to do with it. Now can we go inside? I'm freezing."

"Same. Let's go."

They started back into the restaurant, and Glimmer gasped as another realization hit her. "We can do couple's things like double dates and wine tasting and... brunch!"

“Wait what? No, I’m not—”

Too late. Glimmer was already running to the back room to get to Adora and put the ideas in her head before Catra could stop her.

End Notes

I've heard reviews will fix climate change! Wait what? Oh, I've just been informed that's not true, I knew it wasn't true, and I'm just needy. What can I say ¯_(ツ)_/¯
