Valentine's Day Cards

by AdorasPersonalTherapist

Summary

Catra picked up the mysterious letter that had slipped out of her locker and examined it confusion written on her face and questions fogging her head.

"What's that?" Scorpia suddenly asked, causing Catra to jump. "Oh, sorry wildcat." She added and inspected the letter that was clutched in Catra's fist. Catra loosened her grip on the letter and looked at it again.

"I don't know, it just fell out of my locker when I unlocked it. Do you think someone put it into the wrong one?" Catra asked.

It's not often that Catra receives Valentine's Day cards, so imagine her surprise when she begins receiving mysterious cards from a "Secret Admirer".

Monday

Valentine's Day. The best day of the year, for cliché couples that is. Catra on the other hand, absolutely despises it. Overly cheesy decorations, couples that are all but having sex in the hallways, love letters, and flowers everywhere, that Catra is of course allergic to. Like mentioned, Catra hated Valentine's Day but the aforementioned things weren't the biggest reason for that. It's the fact that Catra has never received a single thing for Valentine's Day.

It's not like Catra really wants anything, or at least that she'd ever admit it. She just wants some sort of proof that someone somewhere cared about her, like really cared about her. Of course, Catra has her best friends Scorpia and Entrapta but that's it. Her biological parents abandoned her to get adopted by a horrible excuse of a mother, Catra has called her whole life "Shadow Weaver", her childhood friends, Lonnie, Kyle and Rogelio abandoned her after she became the most hated person in their high school and even Shadow Weaver kicked her out after Catra stood up to herself during a fight.

The point is, Catra hates it. So when her best friend now turned roommate, Scorpia burst through her door on the morning of the 14th of February, Catra just turned her back to her and covered her head with the heavy blanket to block out the light.

"Good morning, Wildcat! It's Monday and it's time for you to get up and get ready for the best day of the year!" The scorpioni exclaimed, jumping from one foot to another in excitement.

Catra mumbled quietly and buried her face deeper into the covers just trying to fall asleep and never wake up again. Scorpia was having none of it though, so the tall girl walked over and gently tugged at the blanket, revealing Catra's grumpy face.

"There you are. Come on Cat, my moms are waiting in the kitchen for us. They even made pancakes. I know how much you like my mom's pancakes!" Scorpia said smiling at Catra, coaxing her out of her comfortable bed. Catra groaned, rolling onto her back and stretching her full length, basking in the warmth that the light emitted onto her bed. Scorpia stood up and walked over to Catra's closet, picking out her clothes for the day, chatting on the way there.

"So, I know I said I would hang out with you and Entrapta today , but Perfuma asked me out for Valentine's Day and you know I can't say no to my girlfriend on Valentine's. I can cancel our plans if you need me t-" Scorpia said, getting cut of f by Catra while putting down the pile of clothes next to her .

"Scorpia you don't need to cancel your plans because I've had a bunch of bad things happen to me. You go on your date, Entrapta and I'll come home and watch a movie or something." Catra said and sat up on her bed stretching her hands in the air and yawning.

"Ok, well I'll wait for you in the kitchen. My mom' s giving us a ride to school." Scorpia said walking out of the room. Catra pulled her night shirt off and just sat there, slouched over , breathing slowly in and out, before she finally pulled her day clothes on. She stood up and walked over to her mirror, quickly styling her short hair and tucking her shirt into her jeans. She took a one last deep breath, holding it in, before breathing out long and slowly.

After finally making her way to the kitchen and eating her breakfast, Catra and Scorpia picked up their heavy bags and made their way to the parking lot to get into Kipia' s car. Catra was staring out of the window while Scorpia was chatting with her mother about today's plans, she was deep in her thoughts when she heard Kipia mention her name.

“Hey, Catra. Me and Venemo are also going on our date. Well give you enough money to buy food and treat yourself today.” Scorpia said and looked at Catra through the rear-view mirror. Catra smiled at her and leaned her face against the cold glass again, sitting the rest of the way in silence.

You know that feeling, when you have strong negative feelings towards something, but there are those one or two things that make you question if you really are just giving that thing a bad rap. Yeah, well Catra has been having an internal fight about Valentine’s Day since the start of the year for that very same reason. See, there’s this blonde, her name’s Adora. Catra has spoken to her a good amount, but it’s not like they’re the best of friends or something.

Adora moved to Bright Moon at the start of the school year, and everyone has been obsessed with her ever since because of all the same reasons Catra likes her. She’s new, tall, buff, friendly, sporty, smart and really, really gentle with everyone. So basically, she’s the stereotypic gay awakening to people. As much as Catra hated Valentine’s Day, she was ready to suck it all up to get to spend the day with Adora.

So now that Catra was at her locker and she was putting her books into it, she noticed the card in her bag that she had gathered the courage to write yesterday. She turned around, leaning on her locker, pretending to be going through her phone while waiting for Scorpia, when she heard a yelp from her left and looked up to see a hilarious scene.

There was Adora, looking at the floor, her locker wide open, an expression of pure confusion, and a pile of Valentine’s Day cards on the floor near her feet. The blonde bent down and started picking up the cards and shoving them into her bag in a neat pile.

“Someone seems to be liked.” Catra heard Glimmer tease, holding hands with her boyfriend while walking towards Adora. Once Glimmer and Bow made their way to Adora, both of them bent down next to the blonde, helping her pick up the fallen cards.

"I don't even know why I've hardly spoken to people yet and everyone seems to want to be best friends with me." Adora huffed, got up from the floor and placed rest of the cards into her bag. Glimmer laughed and Bow just shook his head gently.

"That looks like they want to be a bit more than friends, Adora." Glimmer cackled and wailed when Bow elbowed her into the ribs. Pft... Sparkles deserves it.

"Honestly Adora, I would be more surprised if someone didn't like you. You're literally a human embodiment of a golden retriever. So, are we really that surprised?" Bow said and waved at the rest of their friend group who were walking towards them from the other end of the hallway.

"Well, I am! I was practically hated-" Catra heard Adora say, before she let the rest of their conversation fade into obscurity while she mentally hit her head against the lockers. Was she dumb? Did she actually think that she would be the only one who taught of giving Adora a card. It's not like it would stand out from the ocean of letters that Adora already got from her adoring fans. Catra shoved the letter into her locker and slammed it shut.

"Jesus, Catra. Bad day?" Glimmer questioned and Catra just growled at her. The sparkly girl flinched at Catra's reaction but let it slide and turned back to her friends. Adora looked at Catra and gave her an apologetic smile before tuning back into the conversation again. Scorpia kissed Perfuma quickly on her cheek before walking away with Catra to their first class.

"Didn't give her the card then?" Scorpia asked, her voice low so other people wouldn't focus on the conversation. Catra chuckled sarcastically and turned to look at Scorpia disbelief written across her face.

“Are you joking? You saw the amount of letters she got, right? Like, not only is she never gonna be able to read all of those but even if she did, my card would not mean anything to her.” Catra said, looking at Scorpia and talking at the same low volume as the scorpioni did.

“What do you mean it wouldn't mean anything to her? If you mean how it’s one buried in the pile she got, then you're wrong. And you given it to her face to face it would've meant a lot more to her then just a random note shoved into her locker .” Scorpia said, stopping in her tracks in the middle of the hallway that led them to their classroom. She turned to look at Catra and placed her pincers on the felines shoulders.

“Scorpia, can we not have this conversation in the middle of the hallway. You know that this won't lead anywhere because I refuse to believe you.” Catra said, mumbling under her breath and continuing her way toward the classroom. Scorpia let out a deep breath and jogged after Catra.

Entrapta turned to look at the two women walking down the hallway towards her and smiled at them. She put her tablet into her back bag and looked back up at her friends after securing all her electronics in her bag.

“Good morning to you two! How’s the morning been?” Entrapta asked and shared a quick hug with Scorpia.

“Good. We saw Perfuma and the rest of her friend group at the lockers. Oh, speaking of Perfuma. I can't hang out with you today because she asked me out to a restaurant.” Scorpia said and looked at Catra, worried.

“Wait, we were supposed to hang out today? My calendar said it was tomorrow. Hordak and I are gonna test our newest version of the human cloner.” We're calling this one "The Human Cloner 2.0 The Legal Version." I can't hang out today .” Entrapta said and looked at Catra who let out a loud groan.

“W ait, “The Legal V ersion?” W as the first, 1.0 and 1.5 versions illegal?” Entrapta you tested those on real people.” Scorpia said frantically asking questions from the purple haired scientist.

“Dont worry . We had them sign legal papers where we mentioned the dangers of it. And everyone was fine. Im not crazy .” Entrapta said and even though Scorpia still seemed unconvinced, Entrapta changed the topic back to the previous one.

“But yeah, Im sorry . Imust've marked the day wrong into my calendar.” Entrapta began, taking out her tablet and checking her color-coded calendar. Catra stopped her, shaking her head and taking a deep breath so she could think her words through.

“t’ s ok. t’ s Valentine’s Day, so you should be able to enjoy it with your girlfriend and lab partner. Ill just watch a movie and curse the name of Saint Valentine.” Catra said jokingly to lighten the mood.

“Just, tell me if you want me to bring you anything and Ill be there in a flash.” Scorpia said and the three friends finally made their way into the small classroom, when the teacher opened the door.

After the first period, Catra, Scorpia and Entrapta were again at their lockers, taking out the next periods textbooks and chatting about school. The feline opened her locker and before loading her previous books into it, she noticed something fall out. Catra picked up the mysterious letter that had slipped out of her locker and examined it confusion written on her face and questions fogging her head.

“What’ s that?” Scorpia suddenly asked, causing Catra to jump. “Oh, sorry wildcat.” She added and inspected the letter that was clutched in Catra’s fist. Catra loosened her grip on the letter and looked at it again.

“idont know , it just fell out of my locker when Iunlocked it. Do you think someone put it into the wrong one?” Catra asked, turning the letter in her hands and shaking her head when she noticed her name written in an elegant handwriting at the front of the letter.

"No, it definitely says my name here. Y ou think it's a prank?" Catra speculated and looked at Entrapta and Scorpia. The latter opened her mouth as to say something but closed it as other people walked into the hallway laughing.

Catra turned to look at the direction of the laughter and there she saw Adora laughing at something her friends said, walking towards her own locker across the narrow hallway. Once Adora stopped her laughing, she looked straight at Catra and waved at her, a content smile on her face. Catra waved back at her and turned back to the letter in her hands.

"Sure, the people here can be cruel but it' s Valentine's Day, no one's that cruel. And if someone is then they really need to get a life." Scorpia said and got the rest of her books out of her locker and dropped them into her bag.

"Y ou wanna go to the next classroom, you can open the letter there before class starts." Scorpia said and the three friends walked out of the hallway. When Catra looked back into the hallway to make sure they closed their lockers, she noticed Adora quickly draw her eyes away from the feline and turn her focus back to her friends.

While walking towards their math classroom, Scorpia and Entrapta continued their conversation from before Catra found the letter, while she, herself was still turning the letter in her hand to find some kind of indication of who it's from.

Catra tried to silence the voice inside her head telling her to chuck the letter because it was just a sick joke from someone. She was genuinely interested in who sent it to her, but she was scared of getting embarrassed if someone found out that she even dared to hope.

As soon as Catra had sat down into her chair at the table that she, Scorpia and Entrapta shared, and had taken out her books, she ripped open the red envelope and pulled out a neatly folded letter that was written on a light pink paper and had the same elegant handwriting as on the envelope itself.

"Well, if someone did this as a joke, they spent way too much time to make it this beautiful." Catra said and leaned back on her chair to read the text that seemed to be rather long.

It read:

"Querida Catra.

I'm writing this letter, because I feel that you need to know that someone has feelings for you. Even though I'm not completely sure what the feelings I feel are, I know they are strong, and that you deserve to know that they exist.

I really admire how you stand up for yourself and your friends. I really enjoy seeing you put people in their place and show everyone that you are your own person and that you rule how you live your life. I find your confidence among other things extremely attractive, and I hope you never stop living your life like you own the damn place.

I also find it very cute when the front parts of your hair do those little curls and you try to straighten it out. Your hair always looks so fluffy, and I just want to run my fingers through it and give you little braids.

You always look like a rockstar in whatever I've seen you wear so keep rocking what you want. Your smile warms my heart and just over all I feel like it's pretty obvious at this point of the card that I like you.

If I made you uncomfortable, I apologize and wish you a great day.

Nunca cambies.

- Yours truly, your Secret Admirer."

Catra let her hands lay on the table, still holding onto the letter. She stared straight in front of herself, zoning out and taking deep breaths to slow down her heart rate and cool herself down. What had just happened? Was this some sort of a bad joke, or a prank by Lonnie and co. Whatever it was, it sure did make Catra's heartbeat faster.

"Catra! Do you hear me?" Catra became aware of Scorpia shaking her gently with her pincers. Catra quickly shook her head and turned to look at her best friends. Scorpia looked genuinely shocked to see the expression on the shorter girl's face.

"Cat, you alright? You look like you just saw a ghost, but like the ghost told you your most embarrassing secret just now." Scorpia teased and rest one of her pincers on Catra's right arm. Catra didnt say anything, she just slipped the letter across the table in between Scorpia and Entrapta.

The two other girls started reading through the letter while the rest of the students began flooding into the classroom. Catra looked around, checking that no one had noticed the letter that her friends were reading and then leaned back closer to her friends who were hunched over the letter.

"Awh. This is so cute. Do you have any idea who sent it?" Scorpia asked and slid the letter back over to Catra. She put the letter back into its envelope and dropped the envelope quickly into her bag, hiding it from prying eyes.

"No. Ihavent seen anyone even standing near my locker. And I dont recognize the handwriting." Catra said, lowering her voice to a whisper so only her friends could listen to what she was saying.

"You really dont think it's a joke?" Catra added and sat up straight when the teacher walked into the classroom. Scorpia shook her head at Catra and turned to look at the teacher when he began talking.

"So, recap for me what happened?" Scorpia asked. Catra, Scorpia and Entrapta were sitting in their school's cafeteria. The first two classes had gone by surprisingly fast and now they were waiting for the next class to start.

"I dont know what I can tell you. We got to school, we went to the lockers, I decided not to give my letter , we left for our literature class, we came back to our lockers, I got the letter , we went to math class, I read the note and then we came here..." Catra recapped.

"Well- Hey!" Scorpia turned to wave behind Catra, at her girlfriend and her friends who were walking towards their table. Catra and Entrapta waved at the other people too and then Catra turned back at Scorpia while Entrapta turned back to her tablet.

"There was way too much raw emotion in that letter for it to be a joke. I have no idea who sent it, but we'll figure it out." Scorpia said while the others couldn't hear since they were still sitting down and getting up to get stuff they forgot.

Catra breathed out a defeated sigh and leaned back on her chair. The chair next to her was pulled back which caused Catra's bag to fall on the floor. Catra bent down to the side picking the bag up from the floor and when she looked in front of herself and tilted her face up, she found herself staring right into Adora's bright eyes.

"I'm sorry , I didn't realize that it's gonna fall." Adora apologized and moved her chair so she could sit down on it while keeping her eyes on Catra. The brunette didn't seem to be able to tear her eyes away from the blazing blue one's staring back at her. Honestly how does this girl seem to get prettier by the day.

"Huh? Oh, yeah, it's fine." Catra said, turning back at her food and looking out through the window behind Scorpia. After closing her tablet and dropping it into her bag, Entrapta smiled at Catra and scooched closer to the table to eat.

"I do have to agree with Scorpia on this one Catra. I might be bad at getting to know people, but I am good at analyzing them. And from what I've learned the text was 78% surely written personally. So how did you feel about it?" Entrapta asked and pointed at Catra with her fork while saying the last sentence.

"I don't know. It was nice, I guess. It's really rare that I receive something like that, and I do have to agree with the writer that I am happy to know that someone actually thinks about me like that. I just don't know. It confuses me a lot that someone could actually feel like that about me." Catra rambled to Entrapta and when she checked, it looked like no one else had paid any attention to her.

When Catra finally made it home that day, she read the note over and over again throughout the night. That day she some how started something she assumed would only happen in those lame love stories.

Tuesday

On Tuesday morning, Catra woke up to her alarm that was going off next to her ear on her nightstand. She silenced the alarm and then sat up on her bed to wake up properly. The magicat was feeling oddly giddy for a morning and when she stretched her arms in the air like she usually does, she shook her muscles to get the excess energy out of her system.

She got up from her bed, walking to her closet, taking out her usual clothes and pulling them on, while listening to the movement and talking of the other people in the house. Catra had gone to sleep the previous night before anyone else got home from their dates.

She loves this unofficial family of hers. Loves all three of them unconditionally, but she could not bring herself to listen to the awkward conversations that the members had while tiptoeing around the topic of Valentine's Day. So, she just skipped it, finally getting the recommended amount of sleep and just enjoying the silence that came with the empty house.

The feline ~~wh~~en making her way out of the room ~~st~~opped by her mirror, styling her hair and cuffing her jeans. She noticed the reflection of the letter she had received yesterday, left on the night stand she had put it on after reading it once again, before going to sleep that night. Catra turned around, picking the letter up and eyeing it. The letter brought a smile on her face which was, unusual to say the least.

Catra tore her eyes away from the letter, placing it back on the nightstand before walking out of her room, taking her bag with her on the way out. She walked to the kitchen and dropped down onto the empty seat, starting to pile food onto her plate while partially listening to the conversation going on in the kitchen.

"Good morning sleepy cat." Kopia said and of fered a few of the plates with food on them to Catra. The brunette accepted the plates and pushed some of the food onto her own plate before accepting the next one.

"Did you sleep well? We noticed you were already sleeping when we arrived home." Kopia said, turning back to her own breakfast. Catra shoved a forkful of breakfast into her mouth just as the question left Kopia's lips. She chewed her food quicker trying to empty her mouth to answer the question, while the two other people around the table chuckled at her.

"Yeah, I did. I had to take advantage of the silence and go to sleep earlier. Besides I wasn't really doing anything. I watched a movie, that was fun." Catra said and pulled her phone out of her back pocket after taking another forkful of breakfast.

"I'm sorry that none of us were here with you yesterday. But I'm glad that you enjoyed your time alone." Venemo piped in and Catra smiled at them before putting her phone back into her pocket and looking at Scorpia.

"We need to leave in a second if we want to catch the bus." The magicat said and shoved the rest of her breakfast in her mouth, before standing up and walking to the hallway with the youngest scorpioni.

Catra and Scorpia were jogging to their lockers, already late for their class, when the two girls reached their lockers, they opened them and while Scorpia put in her books she didnt need, Catra stared at the pink envelope that had fallen out of hers. Catra pushed the books she was holding into her locker and squat down to pick up the letter. Scorpia closed her locker door and turned to look at the feline standing next to her , holding the letter.

"You got another one? Well read it in class we're late. "Scorpia said and took out Catra's books before closing her locker. Catra and Scorpia walked to their class and took their seats next to Entrapt a while the teacher was speaking to the class.

"Hey guys, you made it just in time for Adora's poem." Entrapta said and pointed at the front of the class where the blonde was standing next to the teacher . Adora was looking at the students in the class and once her eyes reached Catra, she held her gaze and smiled.

Catra smiled back at the blonde and then turned back at the pink letter that she still had clutched in her fist. She turned the envelope over and used her nail to slice it open. The letter slipped out onto her table, and she began to read it letting the teachers monologue fade into obscurity while she gave all her focus to reading the letter.

"Bom dia, Catra!

I woke up today and looking outside, the sunrise reminded me of the pink shade dusted across your cheeks sometimes when you laugh too hard. I know Valentine's Day was yesterday , but something still drove me to write this letter to you. So, how have you been? I hope well!

A lot of things have recently reminded me of you. I don't know it's kinda weird, I guess. I hope you don't find it creepy though. Of these letters for that matter. I God I don't know if you even want to receive them. You know what, just point out to your friends around 2pm whether or not you like receiving these and I'll know .

I've been doing really well recently. I've enjoyed spending time with my friends and going on walks. The weather is amazing now, so going on hikes around the forests here in bright moon has been a great way for me to get out and enjoy the beauty of it all. Let this be a suggestion for you to go outside of sorts.

I wish you to have an amazing rest of your week!

- All the love, your Secret Admirer."

"Miss D'riluth! Our student is presenting in front of everyone. Focus!" Catra snapped out of her thoughts and looked at the front of the class where her teacher and Adora were standing. Adora smiled apologetically while the teacher continued glaring at her. The brunette got ready to defend herself, but even before she could she got cut off.

"Ms. Spell, it's fine. She was probably just multi-tasking, or maybe she was reading something important." Adora said and turned back to finishing her poem before the teacher could object.

"Great work, Miss Grayskull. I love how your texts have different handwritings. You're really talented. Now next up we have Mrs. Gatner.

Catra slid the letter to Scorpia and looked at front, listening to Rogelio recite his poem to the class. She felt a tap on her shoulder and turned to look at the note her best friend wrote back.

"No idea who this is but as soon as we find out, you better date them because they seem lovely."

She smiled shortly at the note and then looked around the class, trying to figure out who the mysterious writer could be. Catra paused her stare on Adora and on how she had this slightest bit of smile in the corner of her mouth and how she obviously enjoyed listening to the poems. The feline even let herself for a second imagine that the person behind the letter was the blonde, then shaking the thought from her mind not wanting her to get her hopes up.

When it was Catra's time to recite her poem, she almost took the letter with her instead of her poem. While in front of the class she kept glancing at Adora who now had a bigger and more content smile on her face then before.

After Catra, there was still Bow, Entrapta, Scorpia, Lonnie, Kyle, Sea Hawk, and Starla to recite their poems and after all those, the lunch began. The feline, the scorpion and the scientist walked to their school's cafeteria and sat in their usual spots continuing their chatting.

"Honestly, Catra. Maybe you shouldn't focus on who wrote the letters and more on the letters themselves. From my researches on human communication and stuff like that, I've noticed that when someone does something anonymously, they do it like that for a reason. Maybe this mystery person doesn't want to reveal themselves for personal reasons." Entrapta said and dropped her olives of f her plate onto Scorpia's and then continued eating her food.

"I agree with Entrapta. And besides, we don't even know if you want to receive these letters or if you're just trying to figure out the person behind them to tell them to stop." Scorpia chimed in and placed her claw on top of Catra's hand. The magicat looked at the cafeteria's clock and then turned back at her best friend.

"Ask that again around 12 pm." Catra said and finally began eating her food. Perfuma suddenly appeared behind Scorpia and wrapped her arms around her. The scorpioni looking up at her girlfriend, smiled happily.

"Hbabe, Ilike your hairstyle."Perfuma said and ruf fled the taller girls short hair before laughing about it to herself.

"Thanks, Flower . Hw was gym class?"Scorpia continued and the hairstyle Of fender placed her food tray down on the table to free her other hand to run it through the almost white hair.

"I was fine. Still dont get how anyone thought that putting gym class as the first class in the morning was ok, but Ienjoyed the flower garden that was outside."Perfuma chatted while running her fingers through Scorpia's hair. She looked at the three girls sitting around the table and then it dawned on her.

"Oh, did Istop something? What were you three talking about?"The flowery girl asked and looked at the three friends sitting around the table. Scorpia looked at Catra, searching from her face for any indication whether the brunette was confortable with telling her or not. She slowly shook her head to imply that she wasnt ready to talk about this.

"Nothing much. Just some personal stuf f. Youll hopefully find out some day but not now."Scorpia answered and received a kiss on her cheek from her girlfriend.

"That' s fine, it's good to have some secrets among friends."Perfuma smiled and then walked away with her tray back to her friend's, saying goodbye to the three others.

When it was 12.07 pm, Catra sat back down on her chair after getting another glass of water for her and her two other friends. Scorpia leaned back on her chair and then louder than needed for a normal conversation but not too loud to make it noticeably meaningful she asked, "So, it' s a little over 12pm. Do you actually even want to receive the letters?

"Yeah, I think they're nice to get I guess." Catra stated back louder than needed and then quickly looked around the cafeteria to see if anyone had looked in their direction but to no avail. Everyone was just enjoying their conversations with their friends, and if someone was listening, they did a great job at hiding it.

"No one seems to care. This is pretty useless." Catra spoke, now talking at a normal level again. Scorpia shrugged and then the girls went back to their conversation like everything that just happened, didn't happen. At home Catra placed the new note on the last one and right before she went to sleep, she reread the last sentence "- All the love, your Secret Admirer"

Love... Rare as it is, Catra now more than ever really want to receive this love that everyone praises so much.

Catra pushed a few of her books to the other side of her messy locker, looking through it in search of the note she was hoping to find. After messing up her already messy locker even more, she sighed in defeat and took out her physics books for her first class of the day. She closed her locker and leaned on it, waiting for Scorpia to be ready.

"So, do you wanna open the letter now or in class?" Scorpia said, finally closing her locker and turning her back to lean on it. The scorpioni put her books into her bag and then turned to look at her two friends.

"There isn't one." Catra said and shrugged her shoulders at her friends confused look.

"What do you mean there isn't one?" Scorpia asked and began walking towards their physics class with her friends following.

"I mean, I didn't receive one today . There isn't one in my locker . I checked. Like, an embarrassing amount of time." Catra answered trying to cover the disappointment in her voice. Scorpia huffed out through her mouth and blew a strand of her hair off her face.

"It' s fine though... If the letters stop, they stop." Catra said lying right through her teeth. Her two friends looked at her with a deadpan look, not believing a word she said so the feline turned her face away from her friends.

“We ll talk about this more later , let’s just get over to physics class now.”Scorpia muttered and once the three friends finally made it to their classroom, they fast walked to the back of the class which was mostly empty. The feline sat in the corner and took out her physics notebook, ready to not pay attention to anything the teacher was going to say. Catra sucked at physics, so she just decided not to try .

Catra started sketching random stuff into her notebook and not before long she noticed she was sketching a certain blonde’s facial features all over the previously empty paper. She smiled at her sketches and then flipped the page.

After almost falling asleep 3 times in the duration of the class, Catra could finally leave the classroom and head to the cafeteria. While on the way there Scorpia took a sharp turn to a full hallway and directed her friends in there.

“Where are we going?”Catra asked while being practically pushed into the hallway by her buff friend.

“We’re just going to Perfuma’ s classroom. She wanted to sit with us during lunch so Ithought we could wait for her and her friends.” Scorpia explained and stopped by the math class to wait for her girlfriend.

The hallway was so full that people passing by Catra kept accidentally bumping into her bag. Standing there, in the hallway, the three friends all did different things to pass the time. Scorpia was actively messaging her girlfriend who still hadnt walked out of the class, Entrapta was talking to her lab partner and Catra was staring outside the window, longing to get there out of this busy hallway.

While waiting for the others, the students and workers accidentally bumping into her bag got increasingly more and more agitating and so she put her bag down and between her feet to avoid lashing out. Looking around the recently renovated hallway, Catra noticed a poster on the wall written in one of Adora's various handwritings about the upcoming football games. Once the door to the math class finally opened and the tired looking students started piling out, Catra picked her tote bag again and got ready to leave as soon as she spotted Perfuma.

With the 6 others in the hallway now too, all 9 of them began finally making their way to the cafeteria. Seeming as so many people were actually at the cafeteria, Catra concluded that there would be good food today. After putting their stuff down on their usual table and getting food for themselves, the group of friends finally sat down.

The brunette, sitting in her usual seat, started to immediately dig into her food because she hardly ate that morning and half concentrated into the conversation going around the other friends. While the others were still settling around the table, Adora took a seat next to Catra and smiled at her warmly before part-taking in the conversation.

"I've been there, it's an amazing place."Adora said and pulled her chair in to start eating. She tightened her ponytail which Catra's pretty sure is gonna cause her hair to fall out one day. The blonde cut her fish fillet into small pieces to let it cool down and took a swig out of her water bottle.

"Wait!You've been to Raz's Diner?"Seahawk asked excitedly and Adora chuckled at him, keeping her focus on her plate.

"Yeah, Razbasically raised me for like 11 years of my life. The original Raz's Diner was the place Igot my daily nutrient from for those 4015 days."Adora explained, smiling to herself and then turned to look at Seahawk.

"What a small world, that's where me and my dad brought our fishing catches while Istill lived close by."Seahawk said and then started telling stories about his fishing trips. While the others were listening to the exhilarated man overexaggerating his stories, Catra's focus got pulled to Scorpia, who nudged her leg under the table.

"So, what do you think happened, with you like, not receiving a letter today." Scorpia asked, talking in a lower voice so she wouldn't disrupt Seahawk's story time. Catra shrugged and took a bite of her french fry.

"I don't know, maybe the writer didn't hear me correctly or at all. It's really possible that they just stopped for a reason or another." Catra guessed and took a couple of brussel sprouts on her fork and ate them.

"I'm sure they just forgot one today, or maybe they just were busy yesterday." Scorpia said, trying to explain the silence for the mystery writer, obviously just trying to keep Catra's spirits high.

"Scorpia, it's fine. Honestly, they didn't even own me a letter. The fact they wrote two is already great. I'm not gonna cry myself to sleep because someone who I don't even know stopped writing letters for me." Catra said, and while she was moving her hand to steal a french fry from Scorpia's plate, she accidentally knocked over her glass of water that then spilled on the table and dripped down onto Adora's lap.

"Oh shit, I'm so sorry. I wasn't focusing on what I was doing and didn't notice the glass and-" Catra started, mortified at what had happened. Her litany of apologies got interrupted though by Adora starting to laugh.

"It's fine. Don't worry about it." Adora said through her giggling and accepted the papers Catra brough for her to dry her legs. Catra started wiping the table, feeling less embarrassed hearing Adora laugh through it all. Once the table - and Adora's legs - were as dry as they could get with just paper, Catra threw the trash into a bin and sat back down, taking a deep breath.

"Well, maybe at least the stain on my pants will come off now." Adora chuckled turning to smile at Catra. The feline smiled back at Adora. Of course the blonde found a bright side in everything.

The two just kept smiling at each other, lost in their own bubble, until Glimmer coughed awkwardly to get Adora's attention. When the two girls oblivious two each other's feelings finally popped out of their bubble, they both turned to their own friend groups and decided to forget the whole interaction between them.

Once the lunch was over, the group of 9 broke back into two groups and went their separate ways to their next classes.

When the three friends finally found their way to the next classroom, they dropped into their seats and started pulling out their books and other necessities for the class. When the feline tugged her finances books out, she noticed something drop out of her bag along with it. She placed her books on her table and reached down to pick the fallen thing off the floor.

When Catra picked up the paper, she immediately recognized it as one of the letters she kept receiving and when she tried to quickly sit up to show her friends, she ended up hitting her head on the table.

"Wildcat! Are you alright?" Scorpia panicked and helped her friend safely from under the table to steer clear of another head beating. Once Catra was fully sitting up, she massaged the back of her head till the pain was mostly gone, and she finally showed the envelope to her friends.

Other students had started to trickle into the classroom, so Catra made sure none of them could see it.

"Wait, where did that come from?" Scorpia asked looking at the pink envelope in Catra's hand. The other girl shrugged her shoulders and began carefully ripping open the envelope: "I don't know, it was in my bag when we arrived here. The mystery writer must have snuck it in while I wasn't watching."

"So it's Adora?" Scorpia exclaimed, her voice sounding kind of excited. Catra looked at her friend with a dead pan look and shook her head.

"We don't have proof of that." She stated and took out the neatly folded pink paper.

"What do you mean we don't?" Scorpia questioned, her excitement disappearing from her features and a pout replacing it.

"What would prove that?" Catra asked, taking a deep breath and placing the envelope and the paper on top of her books.

"The fact that she sat next to you at lunch, she could've really easily just dropped it in." Scorpia suggested.

"Yeah, but before that I was standing in a full hallway, and anyone could've dropped it in there while 'accidentally' bumping into me. And on top of that someone could've just dropped it in to my bag without me noticing during the last class or in the cafeteria." Catra refuted.

"Ok so we still have no idea..." Scorpia gave up and watched over Catra's shoulders as the feline unfolded the paper.

"I'm just gonna read the letter now." The brunette stated before starting.

"Hola Catra!

So evidentially you do want to keep receiving these. Which makes me actually really happy. I hoped you would but wasn't entirely sure. Today (the day I'm writing this, so probably yesterday to you) was kind of a busy day for me so I'm writing this at the middle of the night before going to sleep.

To be truthful the past month for me has been a huge shit show that seems to be on double the speed. But something about sitting down, clearing my mind and just focusing on the letter that I'm writing always puts me in a better mood.

I went on a walk with my dog yesterday. I just started walking in one direction and eventually found myself in a clearing in the woods. I looked up and I've never seen anything that magical. It looked like a portal into another universe filled with endless possibilities. Maybe somewhere out there was a universe where I wasn't a lesbian. Maybe there was one where we met when we were younger . Maybe one where one of us had superpowers.

See, that's the thing. You'll never know something before you discover it. Like how I didn't know about that clearing but I will definitely go back there soon again. I don't know, places like that fascinate me.

Also, to top this off with something more sappy and cliché, the millions and millions of stars in the sky reminded me of your freckles and how I just want to spend a day counting all of them one by one.

La mayor adoración!

- Thinking of you, your Secret Admirer!"

"Well at least we now know that the writer is a lesbian."Scorpia said to the group who had read the letter.

"Yeah, and that they have a dog."Entrapta added and brought out her laptop starting to scan through her files.

"We're in Bright Moon Uni, A lesbian who has a dog doesnt narrow it down by much."Catra shot back and slid the letter neatly into her bag, starting to sketch into her notebook again.

"Benos días Gita!

Do you ever find yourself moving on autopilot while you're thinking of something completely different? Happened to me today . I was so out of it the whole morning that I came to school late, and while hardly even working on autopilot, I just walked straight into class and thus I forgot to give you your letter. Honestly sometimes it just seems like I can't focus on anything, and my brain is just really foggy.

I'm guessing the reason I can't focus is just me not getting enough of sleep recently and so I'm just really tired.

I went back to that clearing in the woods and I loved it even more. I will definitely take you there some day if I get the chance. The place is magical and it just changes you outlook on the world. I'm rambling again.

To be truthful you've been the reason I've been so absent-minded for a while now.

I don't know, I've kind of started to use these letters as a kind of a diary for my thoughts. I guess it makes me feel better knowing someone's reading these and I'm not just shouting my words into the void. I should really go to sleep now.

¡Amándote!

Always, Forever , plus a day. Your Secret Admirer!"

Catra had just read her short story literature assignment in front of her classmates and to calm her nerves down, she reread the letter she found stuck to her locker's door. After she had read the letter a couple of times, she looked up at the front of the class where Adora was finishing her story.

"Great work Miss. Grayskull and great work everyone else too. I really liked your story, and Ilove the handwriting on this one. Y ou really are talented."Casta said, complimenting Adora.

"Thank you, Ms. Spell."Adora said and left the front of the class. While walking past Catra she smiled at her and gave her a small wave before going to sit in her seat a few rows back, next to Glimmer and Bow. The brunette turned her head to look at Adora and waved back before returning her focus to Ms. Spell.

"Ok, everyone. All of your stories were in one way or another really good. Your assignment for next class is to write a news article of something that has happened in your life recently. Thank you for today, class dismissed."Casta said, waiving to the student' s leaving her classroom.

Catra walked out first out and then stopped to wait for the others in the hallway. While scrolling through her phone, she noticed a person wearing a bright red jacket stop in front of her , and when she looked up, she noticed Adora looking at her.

"Hey , Ijust wanted to come and tell you that Ireally liked your short story. t read of f so natural that Ibegan wondering if it was based on something in your life."Adora said and stood next to Catra to step out of the way for the other students trying to get to the cafeteria.

"Thanks! And no, I didn't really base it on anything in my real life, just wrote down the first thing that came into mind."Catra said, smiling at Adora. The feline dropped her phone into her bag and put her hands into her pockets.

"Oh, wow! I'm impressed. T aking something that just came to mind and writing a short story about that is super cool. Even though I really enjoy writing, it sometimes takes me a good while to get a plot going."Adora revealed. Catra chuckled at the blonde' s excitement and went to continue the conversation when the last of her friends walked out of the class.

"That' s everyone."Scorpia said and then the group of nine started their walk to the cafeteria.

"I really like your writing style by the way . The way you express emotion and thoughts in your writing is really enjoyable to listen to." Adora continued the conversation once she had walked back next to Catra. The two girls walking at the front of the group were completely oblivious to the smirks and faces the rest of their friend group kept making at them.

"Thanks, again. I really loved your writing style too. I mean out of the two of us it's pretty clear who's the one who has been writing longer than the other."Catra said, smiling at Adora, who turned to look back at her and almost ran into a pole, but Catra pulled her to the side just in time.

Adora thanked her quickly and then they continued their way to the cafeteria.

"Y eah, I thought that you weren't listening to me because you were reading something the whole time."Adora said chuckling slightly and taking a left.

"Oh no, I'd never miss a chance to hear something by you. I was looking at you the whole time but I'm guessing you missed it because you were reading the story. I really enjoyed it all and I'm convinced that if you wanted you could write a whole book." Catra nudged Adora on her side and picked up a tray, plate, glass and fork and a knife.

Adora stood next to Catra on the cafeteria line and continued the banter all the way to their seats. The others sat down with the two girls and joined the conversation.

"Seriously , Adora?" Scorpia asked disbelief written on her face.

"I thought that nothing could go wrong! How was I supposed to know that you're not supposed to leave water unattended. How in the hell is water something that can burn?" Adora asked laughing at herself.

"Princess, seriously . You are such an idiot." Catra cackled and pressed her finger against Adora's forehead. The blonde took hold of her finger and brought it down.

"Princess?" Adora asked, one eyebrow raised at Catra.

"Yep, that's your nickname. I just came up with it." Catra answered smirking at Adora.

"Gosh, get a room you two." Glimmer mumbled and yelped when Bow elbowed her. Adora let go of Catra's finger and put her hand onto her lap feeling embarrassed.

That night, Catra walked into her room, flopped onto her bed, and before putting her phone away, she noticed that Adora had sent a selfie of her and her dog into the newly made group chat Rebellion that, Catra would like to add, she came up with.

Catra smiled at the picture for a while before putting her phone away. The last thing she remembers of that night, is her whispering “dummy .” to herself.

21 Thursday

Standing in front of her mirror, Adora kept restyling her hair that was flowing down her shoulders, stopping from time to time to stare at herself through it. She kept changing her side part to the other side and then checking on it with an unsure look on her face. Adora cant recall the last time she had her hair down, so now looking at her reflection with her blonde shoulder length hair out of its usual ponytail made her question if it was a good look or not.

Restyling her hair for the last time, Adora walked out of her room into the kitchen and took out the sandwich she had made for herself last night. With her breakfast on the table, she poured herself a glass of orange juice and flopped down onto her stool looking out the window of her kitchen.

Adora was hyper aware of her hair every time she turned her head, and she just couldnt shake the looming feeling of her adoptive mother’s presence. She wasnt in the same room, hell she wasnt even in the same city as that sad excuse of a mother and still even the smallest thing as having her hair down felt like she was the biggest disappointment in the universe.

After eating the last bite of her sandwich, Adora put her plate to join her ever growing pile of dirty dishes she had yet to wash, and then walked back to her room to pack her bag. While packing the stuff she needed for the day, she picked up the latest letter she had written for Catra. Sitting down on her bed she decided to reread the letter once more before neatly placing it in its envelope and leaving for school.

A mi amante!

Morning kitty! You know, a week ago I told you in that letter that I kinda started using these letters as diary entries. I was joking at the time, but the more I write these the more I notice how I just keep blabbing on about my life and history without giving it a second thought.

But I mean, opening up to you about things in my life helps me process them and navigate through my life. You get me? Sorting through my thoughts by laying them in front of me to figure them out. I don't know, maybe this is just wishful thinking.

I never really realized how the smallest things can affect my whole day. Like, I've had my hair in the same hairstyle ever since it grew long enough for it, and I think today's the first day in years that I decided to have my hair down.

Even though it's just a hairstyle, I still feel like I look really messy or unprofessional. I imagine it's just the association I've grown up with over the years, that's what my adoptive mother always told me at least. I mean I guess that's just the part of healing and overcoming stuff, but it doesn't mean I have to like it. Does it?

I guess partly I'm just trying to regain my confidence. Seeing you just, not care, makes me feel like I could do that. I'm sure you do care;I just mean I feel like you don't care what others say about your looks. Feel like I could use some of that.

Maybe someday. Until then I'll just keep working on it.

I have recently begun to sleep better again. It might be the weather cooling down, but I fall asleep quicker and see better dreams. You've been in them a lot recently too. I guess I got you in my mind.

Imagine me smirking right now. I'd draw a smiley, but I think it'd look odd in a letter so I'm going to leave it be.

I don't usually like revealing things about myself but being anonymous has helped me a lot to allow myself to feel more vulnerable. But I hope you have an amazing day. I also hope that these letters are making your days easier to get through.

Te quiero!

As always, with affection.

Your Secret Admirer!"

Catra smiled at herself silently while reading the words on the paper. Call her soft all you want but reading a letter where someone poured out their feelings for Catra made her feel unusually giddy. She wanted to go back home and hide her wide smile in her pillow.

She couldnt help it. Everything she read written out on that letter made her feel something one way or another. Catra's whole day had gone badly from the morning. She was convinced that the universe was out to get her that day, so reading the letter felt like a fresh breath of air.

She woke up to her rolling off her bed and while falling onto the floor, she hit her head on the corner of her nightstand. She had somehow forgotten to charge her phone during the night, so it had already died the morning. After getting all the way to the school, she had to call Venemo using Scorpias phone in a panic because she had somehow forgotten her bag in her room. Having to wait for Venemo to bring her books, Catra was late to her literature class. After her class when she was at her locker, she realized that once again, there wasn't a letter waiting for her.

The weirdest part of her day though, was when she was in the line at the cafeteria talking to Scorpia and Lonnie showed up next to her.

"Hey Catra! There you are." Lonnie said and stood next to the feline while she was filling her water bottle.

"Lonnie? Why were you looking for me?" Catra asked and carried her tray of food to her table while Lonnie, Scorpia and Entrapta followed her.

"So, this is super weird, and I don't understand it either but try to keep up with me. Kyle told me that Rogelio told him that he received this letter from... I can't remember the name right now but that's not the point. The person who gave this letter to Rogelio told him to somehow get this to you. Which then Rogelio told to Kyle who then told it to me." Lonnie took a deep breath at the end of her spiel.

So now on her last class she finally had time to open the letter and read it without being disturbed. Catra wondered what the person might look like with her new hairstyle, or what the person might look like while smirking or even what they looked like at all. Catra hates that it has gotten to this point, but she can't deny that she definitely has a crush on this secretive person.

And I mean "Te quiero" for fuck's sake. Sure, it's not as strong as te amo but the person still loves her. And the nickname "Kitten" and the...

"Ok class! Thank you for today and for your behavior today. Class dismissed." Miss Juliet said and went back to her paperwork while the students packed their bags and left from their last class of the day.

Catra was standing outside the classroom, leaning on someone's locker while Scorpia was still chatting to Perfuma. She checked if she had packed the letter with and when she noticed the, this time pastel pink envelope in her bag, she smiled at it and then turned back to her phone. When she heard that the conversation with Perfuma was ending, she looked up at Scorpia.

Her eyes landed on Adora instead and as soon as her brain had comprehended the sight of Adora with her hair down, all the air in her lungs flew out and her brains short circuited. Adora was smiling at something that Glimmer had said and was subconsciously bouncing her leg.

"Catra, you ready to go?" Scorpia asked and waved her hand at Catra when she didn't respond. Catra shook her head lightly and blinked a few times before turning to look at Scorpia.

"Huh? Oh yeah, I'm sorry ." Catra said and pushed herself of f the locker she was leaning on. Scorpia nodded and then turned back to Perfuma to place a kiss on her cheek and to say her goodbyes for the day. While Scorpia was focused on her conversation, Catra walked to stand next to the others.

"I really like your hair today , Adora. It really suits you down like that." Catra said and smiled at Adora's surprised expression.

"Oh, thanks. I wasn't really sure if it'd look good. But maybe I'll have it down more often." Adora said bashfully and smiled at Catra. After she had finished her sentence, her expression changed into slight panic and she eyed Catra like she was trying to read her expression.

"Ok, let' s go." Catra raised her eyebrow at Adora and was about to ask her what was wrong when Scorpia was finally done with her conversation. Catra turned her attention back to Scorpia who stood next to Entrapta, waiting for her to get a move on. She readjusted her bag on her shoulder and then began walking out of the school.

Then it dawned on her.

Catra stopped so abruptly it looked like she might have run into an invisible wall. Catra whipped her head around and just in time saw Adora's hair that was laying on her shoulders as the door closed behind her.

"Catra. Are you alright?" Entrapta asked as she and Scorpia looked at their friend who seemed to be rooted to the ground.

"Yeah. I just, I need to figure something out." Catra said and then continued her walk out of the school, now with more speed to her walking.

Catra stared at all of the letters in front of her. She had underlined stuff from five different letters she had received from this mystery person and had listed them on a separate paper to keep track of everything.

From the first letter Catra couldn't really point out anything specific, but she did have to admit that whoever wrote it seemed to know her on some level. Or they spent way too much time looking at Catra from the sidelines.

From the second letter she could say for a fact that she personally only knows one person who enjoys night walks. Adora.

In the third letter Catra could point out three vital things: The person enjoys writing, they have a dog and they're a lesbian. Catra has witnessed herself Adora's passion for writing. She can confirm that Adora has a dog, swiftie or something along those lines. Catra can't for a fact say that Adora's a lesbian, she has never heard the girl mention her sexuality because it isn't really something casual to ask your classmate that you chat with sometimes.

In the fourth letter there once again wasn't really anything specific for her to use as definite proof, but she could confirm that Adora had looked more exhausted than usual.

h the fifth letter was her most clear clue. The hair . Imean the person had mentioned having their hair in a new hairstyle since ever. Catra has never seen the blonde have her hair in another hairstyle than the ponytail. And then as soon as the letter mentions changing hairstyles to a more chill one, Adora conviniently has her hair down the same day. t's all too perfect to be a coincidence.

Looking at the notes she had wrote down it all started to click in place. But would Adora actually care about Catra enough to write her a bunch of anonymous letters. She does enjpy writing a lot doesnt she. But does she care about Catra enough?

What if it ends up being Adora?Imean Catra has had a crush on Adora ever since she first spoke to her. So, all good?But what if it' s someone else and Catra just convinces herself that it' s Adora. She doesnt want to get her hopes too high and when she ends up being wrong, shell just sound and look disappointed.

Does she even like Adora more than this mystery writer. Sure, Catra's crush on Adora started purely as physical attraction, but she likes her now more because of her dopey personality.

But she doesnt even know who this person she' s reading thoughts from every day. She hasnt even, for all she knows ever spoken to the person, so who's to say that they have more than physical attraction towards her?Ugh, she cant deal with all of these thoughts right now.

Catra drops all of the letters with the newest one jpining them in their drawer and walks out of her room to finally jpin Scorpia' s and Entrapta's game.

2 Friday

"What do you mean it might be Adora? Cat, Ive been telling you this for a week and you havent believed me for a second but all of a sudden you start to think it's her?" Scorpia asked while flailing her pincers around.

"I know . Iknow! And Idont even know for sure if Ibelieve it myself that it is her. But the dog, and the hair, and the style of writing all points to it being Adora. Idont know how Ieven feel like, but you deserve to know." Catra explained pushing her salad around her plate.

"Catra, you just said it yourself. The hair , the dog, the everything. Tell me, what could possibly at this point make you doubt that it is Adora." Scorpia asked leaning closer to Catra across the cafeteria table.

"Nothing, Iguess... Im just, afraid that Ill get my hopes too high and," Scorpia' s eyes widened, and she gently kicked Catra under the table "I'll end up hurt..." Catra finished, turning around and eyes locking with Adora.

“Speak of the devil.”Entrapta whispered as Adora slowed down to a stop and smiled at the three.

“Why are you all looking at me like I’ll do something unexpected any second now.”Adora chuckled and turned her stare at her other friends who sat down at the table all the way to the end of the cafeteria.

“Never let them know your next move, I guess?”Scorpia tried, looking at Catra pointedly and then turning her focus to Entrapta’s laptop.

“Ok?”Adora questioned and turned to look at Catra. She set down her tray and stretched her hands behind her back. Adora’s signature red jacket fell down her arms as she stretched and Catra averted her eyes quickly as to not stare at her muscles.

“Anyway ... So, how has life been treating you, princess? Done anything about your admirers.”Catra asked after Adora had rolled her shoulders and picked up her jacket.

“Admirers? I dont have admirers. I’m just,,, well liked. And why do you ask? Y ou one of them or something?”Adora asked and raised her eyebrows at Catra.

“I didn’t say that.”Catra mumbled.

“So you dont like me?”Adora continued, a smirk on her face. She knew exactly what she was doing and Catra knew that too.

“Didn’t say that either , blondie. I just don’t write you valentines letters and fill your locker with them.”Catra said. She could see that Scorpia was looking at her, knowing the truth, but she had to keep up the facade of being a cool mysterious person who only tolerates a couple of people.

“A ww! Y ou like me, That’s a compliment, being liked by you. I can see it now, Adora, captain of the football team, A straight A student, liked by THE Catra Dilruth. I might have to put that on my CV ." Adora teased and waved Glimmer off when the sparkly girl motioned for her to join them.

"Whatever , Princess. So, why aren't you joining your friends and stopped here?" Catra asked and looked over at the loud group of friends Adora somehow had the energy to be around.

"Eh, thought I'd stop by see how my new friends are doing today . Why, were you guys talking about something I'm not supposed to hear?" Adora asked, her expression changing in to suspicion and eyeing the group like she could figure out what they were talking about by just looking at them.

"No, our lives are not that interesting. But also, you consider us your friends?" Catra questioned and rest her head on her hand.

"Of course I do! Y ou are very special to me." Adora said, that fucking bright smile of hers lighting up the room. Catra turned her face away averting her eyes in hopes that it would help her hide the blush that was creeping on her face.

Catra, special to Adora? This must be some wicked joke that Adora and her group of zoo animals came up with.

"Catra, are you blushing? That' s super cute!" Adora said, her bright smile turning into a slight smug grin.

"No, I don't blush. And I'm not cute!" Catra protested risking a look at Adora, which was a mistake. The girl was grinning smugly, and it widened even more once she got a good look at Catra's, most likely, blazing face.

"A wh, so you like feeling special. Well, you're special to me. And you're cute when you blush." Adora finished by petting Catra' s head, before walking off to the direction of her friends carrying the tray with her. The blonde's food was probably cold by now.

Catra dropped her head on the table and groaned audibly, doing her best to get the blush to fade off her face.

"Wildcat? Are you alright?" Scorpia asked, petting Catra's head with her pincer. Catra took a deep breath and raised her head off the table.

"No, Scorp. I'm not." Catra said and reached into her bag to take out her medicine, when she felt paper against her hand. She looked into her bag and there she once again saw it.

"Ok, now they must be testing me. Right?" Catra said, taking out the letter in her bag and slicing it open with her nail.

"¡Me alegro de verte. ¿Cómo está?

I saw you blushing today. And me me feel kinda giddy not gonna lie. I don't know if the things I'm saying at this point make any sense, but I just really need to get this stuff off my chest.

I guess it's pretty obvious at this point that I like you. I really do. I'm,,, considering your feelings now and realizing that it might not be that fun not being able to know who's behind these letters.
CONSIDERING I'm in no way trying to lead you on and make you think that I'm gonna do it anytime soon.

Changing the subject before I start trauma dumping on you anymore. Back to the blushing. You looked so cute! I've officially decided that if I get the chance, I'll make it my life mission to make you blush as often as possible.

Did you know that blushing is actually thought to be genetic. Really. Some research also indicates that there may be a genetic component to excessive blushing, individuals that have a family member who experiences episodes of excessive blushing are more likely to blush.

I’m rambling again. Well I guess you got a fact of the day or something. I have to stop writing this now tho, so I get to sleep on time.

From my heart to yours,

Your Secret Admirer!”

Yup, that sounds like Adora. Catra thought smiling to herself, butterflies in her stomach.

Wait...

Saturday

Now she had done it. She said she wouldnt and yet this is the situation she got herself into. Catra knew that she shouldnt let herself entertain the thought that it actually was Adora. On one hand it was very possible that it was Adora, but on the other, there are a little under 1000 students in Etheria United. t wouldnt even surprise Catra if there were at least 10 lesbians with a dog who like expressing themselves through writing and who happened to change their hairstyles yesterday in that school.

But no, she was a giggling mess at school while reading the letters, fully convinced that it was the blonde. Catra likes Adora, but she also likes the writer. f they end up being two dif ferent people Catra has no idea what shell do with herself.

Today she was just going to take it chill, have a day with no Adoras or letters or secret admirers or anything like that. ust her , her tv and 75 episodes of her favorite show. But as things go, Perfuma and her friends were going to the newly planted garden close by and she invited Scorpia, who then invited Catra and Entrapta.

So now Catra was on her way to the garden, having an internal fight about whether or not Adora was her secret admirer. It was dumb, she knew that. She has already had this conversation with herself plenty of times but every time she comes to a conclusion, the next day she's second guessing herself again. The only way this ever ends is if she finds definite proof of the writers identity, but till then shell just have to guess.

When walking through the gates of the garden, the first thing Catra recognized was blonde hair. Walking closer to the group she nearly fell on her back, when a golden retriever body slammed her. Swift Wind was running around her legs doing his best to tackle the brunette.

"Sorry, he's pretty excited with new people. If you want him to leave you alone just say so." Catra heard Adora say. The magikat turned to look at the blonde who was walking towards her, skipping over the flowerbeds.

Adora took ahold of her dog's collard to keep him from jumping on Catra.

"Listen, Catra. Ineed to tell you something that's kind of-." Adora started, her face turning serious and voice dropping from her usual light happy one. She got cut off by Scorpia's voice when the scorpioni noticed that her friend had arrived.

"Catra! You actually came. Iseriously didnt think that you'd actually show." Scorpia said and patted the shorter girl on her shoulder. Catra placed her hand on top of Scorpia's pincer and turned to look at the blonde who was talking to her, only to see that she had already walked away.

"Uhhh. Yeah, sorry. What did you say?" Catra asked as Scorpia turned to look behind herself to where the the dog had just ran off with his owner.

"Oh, did I interrupt something? Gosh Wildcat I'm so sorry I thought that she was just calming her dog down." Scorpia panicked. Catra waved it off not wanting her best friend to feel bad.

"I'm sure it wasn't anything serious. Now why did we come here again?" Catra asked and followed Scorpia over to the others.

"Catra! I'm happy to see that you actually came over here. Come on let's go explore so Swift Wind gets to use that energy of his on something." Perfuma said, calling the two girls over to the others where they were sitting at.

All 9 of them got to moving with Adora and Swift Wind leading, the latter stopping to smell everything he could. Glimmer and Bow were idly chatting, a bit behind Adora, pointing at different things as they passed them by. Mermista was rolling her eyes while trying to get Sea Hawk down from one of the park benches he had climbed on and Entrapta was gathering information from the flowers that Catra could only hope was so she could grow the biggest flower, and for nothing else.

Catra walked past Scorpia and Perfuma, who had stopped next to a particularly breath taking flower arrangement, sitting down on a bench nearby and posing for a couple selfies. Looking at the two, smiling and laughing as Scorpia almost fell off said bench made something in Catra ache in a way she didn't recognize. The brunette picked up her pace and caught up to the rest of the group who had stopped at the edge of the garden.

"Ok, so I packed some snacks and a blanket for us. Bow , Mermista and Catra, can you three help me lay it on the ground so we can eat?" Glimmer asked, placing her bag on the ground so she could take out her things.

Catra walked over to Glimmer and unfolded the blanket with Bow, handing a corner to Mermista, who lazily took it and helped the others spread out the blanket.

Adora returned to the others with Swift Wind and sat on the blanket in between Bow and Catra. She picked a strawberry out of the box that Glimmer had just set down on the middle. Sea Hawk jogged to join the picnic, and after him came Entrapta and then Scorpia and Perfuma smiling at each other.

As the time went on, the group started gradually splitting in to smaller groups who then continued their own conversations. Catra was currently listening to Entrapa, as she talked about all the information she collected and how it would advance scientists' knowledge on snowdrops. The topic might've been more riveting had Catra understood any of the words that the enthusiastic scientist used.

After an hour or so, Catra found herself listening to Adora talk about different things. She was currently passionately telling Catra about this book that she had recently read about different constellations and what meaning each of them held in history. Catra noted down her apparent interest in astronomy, another thing that the secret writer and the blonde both enjoyed.

Adora was about to start her next sentence, when Swift Wind walked next to her and dropped his leash into her lap.

"Ah, I should take Swift Wind to a small walk." Adora said and the golden dog sat down and tilted his head when he heard the least word.

"Why can't he just go here far enough from us?" Catra asked and cleaned the leaves, sticks and mud that Adora accidentally kicked on the blanket when she stood up.

"I trained him to come tell me when he need to go so he doesn't accidentally run onto the road, and I'm pretty sure that the park owners don't want my dog to take a dump anywhere a visitor could step on. So I'd just rather take him somewhere myself."Adora explained and clipped the leash on to the dog's collar.

"That makes sense. I'm gonna join you. I need to stretch my legs anyways so a walk wouldn't be too bad for me."Catra said and took Adora's hand that the taller girl offered so she could stand up.

The girls and the energetic golden retriever started walking towards the small forest that was off to the side of the garden, listening to the sounds of the animals and people around them. Once they got outside the perimeter of the garden, Adora walked Swift Wind over to a bush and let him go do his thing.

"So, Adora..."Catra started, bouncing on her feet waiting for Adora to turn her focus back to her. Adora followed her dog with her stare to see where he went and then listened to what Catra had to say.

"What's up?"Adora asked, rolling the leash around her hand and smiling at Catra. Now looking at her, the blonde noticed how the nature around them made Catra's eyes looks. The other an icy blue and the other a yellow with a golden hue. She had to resist her hands from reaching to hold the others face so she could get a better look at her eyes.

"You wanted to tell me something earlier. You know, before Scorpia interrupted you. And you seemed pretty serious, so I was just wondering what it was."Catra asked and followed Adora's face as the other bent down to put the leash back on the dog so they could continue their walk.

Once Adora stood straight again, Catra could see her wide eyes. The girl looked a little spooked, an expression Catra had never seen on her face.

"Ah..."Adora chuckled awkwardly, "Don't worry about it, it wasn't anything important. I mean, I thought it was at first but Scorpia cutting me off made me question huh, was this a way for the universe to tell me to shut up? So I just decided to do just that. I really isnt anything that should concern you. So you, forget it. Please?" Adora stopped her rambling by taking a deep breath.

The girls had started to walk again somewhere during Adora's rambling and Catra couldnt see the taller ones face anymore since she was walking in front of her. But she didnt have to see it to know that something was wrong.

"Hey, Adora. Are you ok? Honestly whatever you were going to say, Im sure it's alright. Just tell me. Im worried about, well everything you just said." Catra stopped Adora by her arm and forced her to look her in the eyes.

Adora took a deep breath and then looked at Catra again. The smile returned to her face and she tried again. "Everything's fine. The thing Iwas going to say wasnt important, and Ithink were just better off with me not saying it. Everything's good, WE are good."

Adora pressed her forehead against Catra's as to drive the message home but then backed aways realizing what she did. "Sorry, about that."

"It's alright, you wanna return to the others or still continue this walk." Catra said in a calming voice, trying to get the blonde's brain to slow down. Feeling bold, Catra took ahold of Adora's right hand that wasnt holding onto Swift Wind's leash.

Adora looked at their clasped hands, squeezed them as of testing how it felt and then smiled at Catra again. "I'd like to keep walking, if that's ok with you?"

"I'd love to." Catra said trying to bury her face into the scarf around her neck to hide her blush. Adora chuckled at Catra, bumped their shoulders and then continued down the path they had stopped on. Still holding Catra's hand, still knowing that Catra doesnt know she's her secret admirer, still happy.

Later that night, when Catra and Scorpia had returned home from the picnic and had eaten with Scorpia’s mothers, Catra had retreated to her room for the night. Laying on her bed, face against her pillow, giggling while thinking back to her walk with Adora made her feel like a 12 year old having her first crush. The walk lasted so long that when they returned to the group, they got endlessly teased about what mightve happened between them during it.

At this point, was Adora the secret writer or not, she definitely cared about Catra on some level, and that’s all that mattered to her at the moment.

The magikat reached out for the letters she had left in her drawer to read through them again. She hadnt received a new one today for obvious reasons, it being a weekend and all. And even though she mightve gone on a walk with her admirer today , Adora’s not dumb enough to hide a letter into her bag and expect her not to find out if it was her.

The way the blonde stared at her at times, the way she called her special the other day. Just everything about the tall woman made her so unimaginably giddy.

God Catra was whipped.

¡Querida morena de ojos multicolores!

Why is this happening to me? I made sure that there would always be enough, that I'd never be that lazy to let it get to this point. But here we are, all my good clothes are in the laundry. I can't believe that I got so inconsistent in my schedule that I forgot to wash my clothes.

Ok, before you judge me, you have to understand that routines are a way of life to me. I can't remember when I wore anything else except my uniform. And as pathetic as I might sound right now, you have to understand where I'm coming from.

I know I mentioned this briefly in the letter that day I changed my hairstyle for the first time, but my adoptive mother was always super strict on what I wore or how I had my hair. She always wanted me to seem 'presentable' around everyone.

I don't think I've told you much about her, have I? It's kind of ironic, thinking that her name was Hope and yet she still managed to suck up all the hope I had for my future. I can't even remember when Hope adopted me or what happened to my biological parents.

I can't be even sure if she ever told me.

I think she took me in to make herself feel like she was doing something great by adopting a child. I don't think she considered the fact that she wasn't ready for a child.

She was always super controlling of my life and even of the smallest things I did. Image was always super important to her so wherever we went I always had to look like we had it all figured out. You know, hair in the same style and the same uniform on to simulate professionalism. The whole 9 yards.

She always told me that if we didn't look to others like we had it together then there was no way we ever would. If I slouched or put my elbows on the table while eating she would always shout at me. If I didn't look people in the eyes or didn't say sorry and thank you or shake their hands it was always the same thing. 'Listen to me #### child you know how well I thought you to follow these rules, why won't you be a nice girl and show some respect to your elders.'

It's said that 'old habits die hard' but I never really believed it. Why would anyone do things they don't want to when they don't have to. Until I realized that even now, a few years since I left Hope's house, I still follow the ridiculous restrictions she set for me. I still follow her dress code, I still keep my hair in that same style she put it in and I still feel like she's right there behind me, judging everything I do.

So you can just imagine the feeling I currently have, knowing that I have to step outside of my comfort zone by disobeying her.

God I sound like a dog.

Honestly Hope and the pressure she set on me was originally the reason why I decided to keep myself anonymous. I don't think I've done a good job at it but maybe that doesn't matter at this point.

'Listen, Catra. I've thought a lot about how I shouldn't let Hope control my life anymore. And as much as I need to thank her for making me scared to give these to you face to face, I should also try and push myself out of the mold she so neatly tucked me into as a child.

I think me, and you, both need this anonymity to end. I have no idea how or when I'll reveal myself but I want you to know that I'm not keeping myself anonymous just for fun.

Until then, I hope you're still enjoying these letters.

Que tengas un buen comienzo de semana!

With love And Adoration,

Your Secret Admirer!

Catra folded the note she just read and breathed out through her mouth, while gathering her thoughts. Most of the notes she had received were light hearted and expressing the writers interest in Catra. Sure some of the previous once had some heavy topics, but this was the first letter were it truly felt like the writer let loose and just wrote down their authentic feelings.

It was also the first letter where Catra was addressed directly in something else then just the greeting at the start. The whole letter sounded more important than the previous ones. From its kind of ridiculous problem, to its trauma exploration, to its scribbled out part that was probably the writers name, to the admission that the writer might be ready to reveal their identity soon.

"Well? Can we look at it too, or are you just going to keep looking at the table with an expression that seems like you just saw a ghost?" Scorpia asked and leaned closer to the table to enter Catra's field of vision. Catra shook her head and rubbed her face to ground herself back to the moment.

"Uhh, I don't think this letter is something the writer wanted you to read. It feels, personal in a way? I don't want to share something that might be only intended to be shared with me." Catra said, clutching the letter to her chest.

"Hey Blondie! Love the outfit." Scorpia shrugged and as the girls were getting back to their lunch, their attentions got pulled away by a loud shout from across the cafeteria.

"Shut up asshat!" Glimmer shouted, she had stopped right next to Catra while she and the rest of her friend group were walking to the table the three others were occupying.

"What? Can't compliment a fine woman when I see one?" The rando Catra had never seen before, shouted.

"There's a difference between complimenting and catcalling. Right now you're catcalling her. So I would appreciate if you shut up like I just told you to..." Glimmer shouted back and sat down next to Bow. After a bit of silence around the cafeteria, the people in there slowly started getting back to their previous conversations.

"What's that?" Adora asked. She was looking at the letter that Catra was still holding in her hands, completely ignoring what had just happened. Catra looked at Adora with a confused expression and was about to ask what she meant, when she realized that there's still a chance that Adora isn't the secret admirer.

"Just a letter I received." Catra said and put the folded letter back into her bag.

"Someone likes writing more than me? Rare... What's it about?" Adora asked, and took a bite out of her sandwich. Seemingly completely unaware of the contents of the letter.

"It's pretty personal. You know, about stuff. Don't worry your pretty little head with it." Catra patted Adora on top of her head on the ridiculous poof that the blonde was sporting again.

“Little? That has to be the first time someone has ever called my head little. Everyone always calls my forehead big...” Adora said, mainly to herself, but Catra happened to catch it too.

“You do have a big forehead, maybe you should monetize it...” Catra joked, tilting head, like she was thinking about the logistics of it.

Adora looked up, her eyebrows scrunched together and a tiny pout on her lips. Like she was trying to look at her own forehead. Catra cackled at Adora’s expression and took hold of the hand she was touching her forehead with, pulling it away from the forehead.

Adora gave Catra a deadpan stare and to make up for it, Catra leaned forward and pressed a quick kiss on her forehead.

“Or maybe it’s a good canvas for kisses, I guess.” Catra said letting go of Adora’s hand and then turned back to her meal, trying to avoid Adora seeing her blush.

“Yeah” Adora breathed out also turning back to her meal, the kiss becoming the next thing that Adora avoids to spare her feelings. Catra looked up from her meal and accidentally locked eyes with Glimmer, who raised her eyebrows at her pointedly. The two exchanged glances in a non-verbal altercation and then just moved on without saying a word.

“I like your clothes, Adora. I don't think I've even seen you wear anything other than those red jackets, grey pants and compression shirts of yours.” Scorpia suddenly commented. Adora looked up from her meal and looked at Scorpia confused.

“Yeah, I don't really wear anything else, do I? I got way too focused on other stuff recently that I completely forgot to wash my usual clothes, and now I ran out of them. I had to opt for this shirt and the jeans.” Adora explained, motioning at her clothes.

“I like that blue color on you more than the red. Don't get me wrong, both fit you well. I just think the blue compliments your ... eyes.” Catra said, at first intending to compliment Adora, and then realizing how much of a hopeless lesbian she sounds like.

The others around the table agreed, others to boost Adora's confidence, others to save Catra's ass. Adora smiled at her friends, and like always, Catra just wanted to grab her face and kiss it senseless.

After the conversations had died down and most of the people had finished their food, Glimmer happened to glance at her watch.

"Shit, Adora, Bow we need to leave. My mom' s waiting for us." Glimmer said and stood up from her seat, taking her dishes with her. Bow and Adora did the same, the former then following his girlfriend.

"Oh, by the way , now that Iremember . There's the season final game on Thursday, are you guys coming. Imean Scorpia' s obviously coming since she's in the team, but what about you Catra and Entrapta?" Adora said stopping at the end of the table, next to Scorpia and Catra.

"Entrapta usually comes there, although she almost always forgets who wins so Ihave no idea if she even watches the games, but have fun trying to convince Catra to come. Not even once have Imanaged to get her to come watch one of them." Scorpia said pushing the last of her food around the plate before eating them.

"What? Y ou're not coming?" Adora asked turning her focus entirely on Catra.

"Idont get what people see in a bunch of people running around on a field while screaming at each other. t seems so boring." Catra said, staring at her phone.

"C'mon, your friends are playing, and it' s the season finale. Scorpia and Ineed you there. Y ou wouldnt do it for us?" Adora asked, leaning on the table and gently turning Catra's head with her hand to meet her gaze. Catra's eyes were on the same level as Adora's chest and once she realized that, she moved her eyes quickly to meet the blonde's.

"You need me there?" Catra asked, voice almost breathless, afraid to move or say the wrong thing.

"Of course I need you there, you're special to me. I bet we'd win if you were there." Adora said, dropping her hand that was still on Catra's cheek and using it too to lean on the table. Catra, Adora, Scorpia and Entrpata were all quiet, Catra and Adora holding eye contact and Scorpia and Entrapta observing the flirting happening in front of them.

"Fine, I'll come there" After a little bit of silence Catra caved in. Adora bounced happily.

"That's great, I'll see you three in literature class, I need to catch up with Glim and Bow right now." Adora said, she gave a kiss on Catra's cheeks and then went on her way, after her two friends. The rest of Adora's friend group left after the blonde.

Once Catra turned back to her two other friends, they were both smirking at her.

"There's no way you can deny that she likes you anymore. I mean hell, she just told you that you're special to her and grabbed your chin like she was about to make out with you and then she gave you a kiss on the cheek before leaving. If you dare to tell me that you still believe that she only likes you platonically Entrapta might just have to read the definition of platonic to you." Scorpia said, still smiling smugly at Catra who, once again, had turned as red as a tomato.

"Whatever." She just ended up mumbling and then the three friends left the cafeteria toward the literature classroom.

"Thank you miss Driluth. Next up, miss Greyskull." Catra sat back down on her seat in the third last row. She had just presented her homework and could now finally relax the rest of the day . Adora and her caboodle had arrived to class a little late, much to Ms. Spell's dismay.

The blonde walked to the front of the class and sorted all her papers out. She put her folktale assignment on the projector and started her presentation.

Catra tried her best to focus on Adora's talking but every time she focused on the tall muscled blonde that was talking about her favorite folktale, she always flashed back to the cafeteria and started replaying the conversation that they had.

"Thank you miss. Greyskull. Lovely handwriting as always. Y ou can take a seat, and up next is Entrapta." Casta said, Entrapta leaving towards the front while Adora walked back to her seat next to her friends in front row.

Catra felt her phone vibrate in her back pocket, so she took it out and checked the notification. The best part of sitting in the last few rows is that Catra doesnt have to fear that she' s bothering someone with her phone, because anyone who's interested in the class, is sitting in the first few rows.

Checking her phone, Catra noticed that Adora had messaged her.

"Y ou ok?" The message read.

"Y eah, Im fine. Why?" Catra sent back.

"Just wondering, you seemed pretty out of it while I was at the front." Adora responded. Catra smiled at her phone, and thought of a good response.

"Nah, Im fine. T ired, mostly..." Catra responded and then turned her focus back to the front where her friend was finishing up. Catra noticed movement in the first row, and looking down she saw Adora smiling at her. The brunette waved at her and looked back at her best friend after Adora laughed and turned around herself.

"Thank you Ms. Dryl and thank you to everyone else. T omorrows assignment is to write a letter to someone. You can designate it to someone, or you can just write it for me. See you all tomorrow , class dismissed."Catra said, the class finally ending and the people starting to leave to go home.

As Catra, Scorpia and Entrapta were making their way out of the classroom and Scorpia stopped to say goodbye to her girlfriend, Catra waved goodbye to Adora who in return smiled at her again.

"Bye everyone, W ell see you tomorrow ."Scorpia said before the three friends left the building.

31 Tuesday

Walking into the literature classroom, her last class for the day, Catra and her friends made their way to their usual seats. Catra took out her literature project and the most recent letter she had found in her locker today morning. The magikat was supposed to read the letter in her morning class but got busy and forgot, then in her second class she lost the letter into her bag and when she found it, the class had already started.

So now, in her third class for the day, Catra could finally read the letter while Ms. Spell started the class. Taking it out of her bag and unfolding the letter, Catra saw the hand writing she had become so accustomed to as the secret writer.

Mayito de sol!

Hagain, this letter 's going to be shorter today because I actually have something else to write but I had to write this first since you're more important.

I got compliments yesterday! Honestly , I felt really uncomfortable in my clothes at first, but getting compliments from different people actually made me feel a lot better. Someday I'll shake off all the shit hope left me with. I'm not quite there yet, but I'm sure I'll make it eventually.

God, it's been really busy recently. I have a lot of school work to catch up to, I have the sports season ending and all the tests coming up. I've been drinking a lot of tea and hot chocolate to stay awake and keep my stress at bay, you can guess how that latter has worked out. I've pulled two all-nighters in the last week and have worked non-stop, but now, finally, I've gotten most of my work done and I can finally relax.

I've recently really felt like I need to hug someone. It's not like I'm sad or anything, hugging just feels like a stress reliever to me. My dog's really bad at staying still for hugs so that won't work. Maybe I can hug you once you know who I am?

Until then!

Con amor y adoración.

- Your Secret Admirer

"Miss. Driluth! Why can you never focus when Miss. Greyskull is presenting!" Casta shouted, grabbing Catra's attention out of the letter and back to the class.

"Sorry . I was reading through my assignment to make sure everything's fine." Catra responded and the folded the letter she was holding, back into her bag.

Once Catra had turned her focus back to the front of the class, Casta gave Adora permission to continue her presentation. Adora continued, talking about the emotions she tried to convey through the letter and what tactics she used in her writing. Casta made note and asked the blonde of the ending of her letter, which the blonde explained.

"The endings not really anything special, more of just how I format the letters I write. I wanted the text to still feel like it was mine so I kept my usual format and then just started building it off of there with the topic and such."

t read:

I hope you're enjoying your time there, can't wait to come visit you all soon again!

Miss you all!

Always and forever

- Adora Greyskull

At the end of the letter was a small sticker with the words, "Hold me close, hold me dear", something Catra vaguely remembers Adora mentioning was an inside joke with her friend Huntara back in her childhood town.

Catra reached back into her bag in a hurry and took out the letter again, unfolding it and comparing it with the one Adora had written. Looking up at the screen, Catra's expressions went through an emotional roller coaster, starting from neutral, changing to confused, to shocked, to finally ending up with a mix of happiness and shock.

The formatting, the way of speaking, all the previous parallels and the hand writing, it all matches.

Oh god, the hand writing, of course.

How had Catra NOT thought of it? Adora's known for having different hand writings in different things. Catra had seen her handwriting multiple times and yet still hadn't seen her handwriting. Of course she didnt recognize the handwriting in the letter 's to Adora's because there wasnt just ONE handwriting for Adora.

"Great work, as always Ms. Greyskull. And once again another great hand writing." you don't say. "Next up is Ms. Driluth." Casta said, pointing at Catra once Adora had walked back to her seat.

The rest of the class went by pretty slowly. Catra read her assignment letter and explained a few parts of it, the whole time avoiding Adora's eyes because when at one point she dared to look into them, her whole face almost broke into a smile. And she cant have that, she has a whole bad girl image to hold up.

After her presentation, went Perfuma, then Glimmer, then Lonnie, then Bow, then Entrapta, then Sea Hawk and then Catra lost count. Sitting in the class, listening to a student after student read their letter and explain this and that about their projects in a monotone voice, made Catra regret not focusing more on Adora's presentation. She at least was interested in what she was writing and expressed it well in her writing and voice. No wonder she was Casta's favorite.

Catra spent most of the last of the period restless in her seat, thoughts running haywire over today. Once the class was over and Casta had dismissed everyone, Catra sprung up from her seat, running down the stairs, ran past Adora to the door, said bye to Casta and then speed walked her way home with Scorpia having to catch up to her again and again.

Once Catra got home, she ran to her room, grabbed her pillow and screamed into it like she was a tween again.

2W ednesday

Walking through the hallway to her locker, Adora spotted Catra and Scorpia already at their lockers chatting about something. Catra was leaning on her locker, smiling faintly while the taller was enthusiastically talking about something. Entrapta was next to them seemingly focused on her own thing, waiting for the other two.

Adora turned around to face her locker, she opened her bag to take out the stuff she didn't need for her math class. With her right hand holding on to the stack of books, the blonde opened her locker with her left hand almost smacking herself in the face with the locker door.

Why was this world made for right handed people...

Placing her spare books into her locker, Adora noticed something that she had not left in there. Picking up the red paper and taking it out of her locker, she turned it over in her hand looking at it. Adora put the mysterious paper back in her locker and took out her math books, dropping them into her bag and the picked up the paper again before closing her locker.

Looking at were Catra and her friends were through her dark phone screen, she concluded that she had to wait a bit longer to put the newest letter into Catra's locker. So she decided to waste some time.

Unfolding the paper, Adora noticed that it was a letter that she had not written. So, out of pure curiosity she began reading it.

Hey , Adora.

I'm just straight out going to come out and say it, this whole writing thing seems more like your thing, it just felt appropriate to write one for you after all this time.

Honestly I'm surprised that it took me this long to figure out who you were. I mean the dog, obviously Swifty. The writing, I knew you were good at it. The walks to the forests, I could see you were in good shape and also you had to take your dog to walks. The lesbian thing, ok to be fair that's not rare in Etheria United but it with everything else I think is even more proof.

But more importantly , the hair and the clothes changing the same day that you mentioned them in the letters. I guess that's just me really not trying to get my hopes up.

What eventually did give away your "secret" was yesterday' s literature class. Everything about the letter you showed as your assignment screamed "notice me." Sure it might just be the way you format and write your letters, but it just seemed intentional in a way.

I mean I think I've known since the first letter in a way, I just didn't let myself entertain that thought I mean, really. You? Adora? The Adora. Football captain, new girl, every gay' s dream girl Adora.

I'm not looking for sympathy from you, I'm mostly just shocked that literally everyone in Etheria United wanted to date you and out of everyone, you chose to write those letters to me?

When the first letter showed up in my locker I was just convinced that it was some sick joke by some douche who tried to get my hopes up to embarrass me. Then there was the second letter, and then the third. You know, at some point you know that you have the high ground. Either the secret person actually likes me, or they failed miserably at their prank.

Now to the more sappy stuff, if you ever mention anything of this part to anyone else I'll burn this letter and you with it.

I don't know if you realize how much the letter's you've written to me have helped me with my days. At first they just were a few cute compliments that made me feel better in my skin, and then at some point it changed into me looking forward to getting the next letter. As much as you started using the letters as your personal diary, I started using them as a way to start to see what other stuff you had to say about you day. It was really interesting to see how you felt about stuff.

Sure some of the more personal stuff felt heavy at times but they never felt crushing, more just like you were letting me carry part of the weight of the things you were feeling.

You know, I actually made you a Valentine's Day card at first but when you opened that locker of yours and I saw the sea of them you received, I just decided that there was no way you were actually going to ever care about my card. So I just threw it back into my locker and hid it away to build up the walls that I had already hid my vulnerability in once.

Guess I was wrong?

God now I wish I would've somehow recorded the internal battles I had with myself. Trying to decide who I like more, Adora or the mystery writer... So, basically you or, you...

And if this all ends up being some sick joke and you don't like me then I guess I don't have to choose... Win win?

Yours truly,

Whatever ...

- Catra

Adora was staring blankly at the letter in her hands, heart pounding in her chest, either out of pure panic or hope. Lifting her eyes from the letter and closing them, Adora took a deep breath to ready herself to face Catra. Just as fast as she turned around she also fell on her ass as she shouted out of surprise.

"What'd you think?" Catra, who might Iadd was right behind Adora, asked, scaring the blonde.

"God, Catra you scared the shit out of me." Adora said, taking a few breath to calm herself down. Catra chuckled at Adora and offered her a hand, to help her stand up. Taking a hold of the hand offered to her, the blonde stood up from the floor and patted her clothes down, cleaning the excess grime of f of herself. "You gotta learn to make more noise when you sneak up on someone like that." Adora continued, shaking herself off.

"Sorry blondie, you seemed so focused on whatever you were reading that Icouldnt bring myself to distracts you. Also you didnt answer my question." Catra answered, crossing her arms and smirking up at the taller blonde.

"Yeah Ithink all my thoughts exploded on the locker behind me when you jump scared me. Kinda hard to understand what you're asking when my only thought is 'warning, you're dying in approximately 2 minutes'." Adora said and leaned on the aforementioned locker behind herself. "What did you ask?"

"I asked what you thought of it. T ook me the whole last night to write because Im really bad at it. Although Im pretty proud of that one. Some activists might hate me for how much paper Ispent drafting it. But hey, at least Idid it." Catra explained still smiling at the taller woman in front of her.

Adora looked at the letter again, gathering her thoughts before speaking again. "I really like it. t felt really genuine and like you just let you thought stream lead you through it. That's the best type of writing in my opinion, you know. Letting your authentic feelings lead you through the process but not letting it get out of hand. Ireally suck at hiding stuff tho, dont I Maybe Ishould shut my mouth from time to time."

"I mean do you really? And you not said some of the stuff you did, then I don't think we'd be here. And some secrets do have to end eventually. Also how long did you think you could just string me along for? Also you technically still didn't answer my question. Adora, I didn't mean what you thought of it from a writers perspective, I wanna know what you, Adora, thought of it." Catra said, going to place her hand on top of Adora's but pulled it away when she heard Glueball and Bongos walk into the hallway.

"What did we walk into?" Glimmer questioned, looking between the four people who were standing in the hallway in front of her and Bow. Glimmer looked at the paper Adora was holding, at Catra who was standing in front of Adora and recapped what the last thing Catra said was.

After realizations hit her square in the face, she walked over to Scorpia and Entrapta and dragged the two of them and Bow towards the stairs and the second floor, rambling about something. "Oh yeah, our class is starting soon and we're really late. We should all probably leave, Adora see you in class."

The three friends disappeared into the second floor and a second later Adora heard the door opening and closing and then steps walking further away from the closed doors. Adora was about to say something when she got cut off by Catra.

"Ok, I can't believe I'm letting you know any of this, but 1. Glimmer's right so I guess we need to hurry. 2. Adora, I like you, have liked you for a while. I couldn't believe it when I realized that you were my 'secret admirer' or whatever. I wrote you a note to express my feeling to you, now can you please let me out of my misery and say something?" Catra opened up pacing back and forth in a line in front Adora.

"Catra, relax. The world's not blowing up, no one has a big conspiracy against you, I'm not here to make fun of you and can you please stop pacing around and look at me because you're stressing me out."Adora said, taking a hold of Catra' s hand to stop the magikat in her mission to carve a moat in front of Adora's locker.

"Thank you, and sorry for snapping at you."Adora said after Catra stopped her pacing.

"I'm sorry that I don't have a lot to say but like I told you in the letter's, habits are a way of life to me. I have a clear cut plan for every day. My plan for today did not include telling you about my feelings. I built myself a structure because I was so scared of telling you how I felt, so seeing it fall down since I was being nowhere near secretive as I had planned me to be is not just something I shrug off."Adora explained, squeezing Catra' s hand that she was holding.

"I'm scared of being vulnerable. So so scared. Sure I might seem like this really powerful cocky person that everyone looks up to like I'm some warrior, but that's because I have a backup plan for everything. I have everything pre planned and mapped out in case something happens, because that's what I've grown up in, looking like I have everything together even tho I don't. Structure, that' s what I'm used to. Having a structure fall down that I planned out in a hurry because I decided to back out of the previous plan is nothing new , but I always have time to think of a quick backup plan when that happens. Right now? I don't have that because there are too may serious feelings in this mess. Because I like you too, I really do. But is that enough, I mean I hardly have myself figured out how am I supposed to survive in something more serious than just anonymous letter 's when I can't just build a structure around a relationship."Adora finished with a chocked sob when Catra pulled her into a tight hug. Adora was not planning on crying in front of anyone today, nothing is seemingly going along her plans.

Catra gently lowered the two of them on the floor with Adora clinging to her, while still forcibly letting out sobs that sounded like she was trying to hid them behind coughing.

"Adora, take this from someone who went to therapy for years for similar things. Life isn't something you just map out. Nor are relationships or friendships or anything in life. If you just work things out through a script you wrote to yourself to avoid bad things, then how are you ever going to grow as a person. I understand wanting to avoid getting yourself hurt, that's what I literally did by not giving you that original card, but having your whole life held up by structures you built to keep yourself safe from anymore bad things is not healthy for you or any other person. You need stuff to happen to you so you can grow from them and let yourself heal." Catra said, petting Adora's hair that the magikat had pulled out of its ponytail that she had recently began to resent.

"Because you, Adora, deserve to experience love and happiness and anger, and anything else because you feel like it, not because it was one of the pillars that held up that structure of yours. If it's with me, if it's with literally anyone else, all I want you to know is that you deserve happiness and I want you to experience it because you happened to end up in a situation that brought you happiness." Catra squeezed Adora, then letting the woman take a deep breath to calm herself more. Adora pulled away from Catra's hug and looked at her with a weak smile and tears still running down her cheeks.

"Sorry, I don't know what got to me." Adora chuckled through her tears.

"Adora, please don't apologize for feeling something." Catra said, wiping Adora's tears away with her thumbs and the placing a careful kiss on her forehead. Adora smiled at Catra again, this time with more life in it.

"Ok, listen Catra. I probably should say this too while I'm still feeling emotional and like I actually want to open up. I like you, that's why I wrote the letter's, I just didn't know how to tell you. I like you, more than just platonically. I like you because of the way you pretend to be this really tough and hard to get to know person even though you're really just a softie inside. I like you because you listen, you understand and you try to talk through it. I like you because you care about the people close to you. I like you because you're insanely attractive and confident. And as cliche or whatever this is I just like you because you're you."Adora finished, standing up from the floor , offering hand to Catra too.

"We should probably go to our classes now. We both have basically missed the half but it's better to show up at the end than not at all. Also you better not mention about what ever just happened with anyone, please."Adora said.

"What happened? What do you mean happened? I hardly even saw you today, god, from what I know you might've not even been at school today."Catra said, looking around like she didn't even see Adora.

"Whatever kitty . Thanks, by the way."The blonde laughed at Catra ruffling her short hair and then started walking towards the stairs to the second floor. Catra grabbed onto her wrist, stopping her from leaving just yet.

"Wow, not even a kiss on the cheeks after that? Listen princess but I just wrote you a letter , telling you about how I like you, then I gave you the heart attack of a lifetime and then became your personal therapist. And all I get is a nickname and a new hairstyle?"Catra questioned, turning the blonde, who was holding in her laughter , around.

Adora rolled her eyes, took two steps closer to the magikat to close the short distance in between them. She placed her hands on Catra's jaw and at the back of her head, and pulled her up into a kiss. When Adora almost pulled away, Catra quickly wrapped her hands around the taller ones neck to pull her back down, also turning her head slightly to an angle to deepen the kiss a bit.

Once the kiss was actually done, Adora and Catra were smirking at each other like they had just done something forbidden.

"Ok, dummy . Let's go study or whatever."Catra said and started walking towards the stairs, hand in hand with Adora.

"Oh, by the way , before we go upstairs Ithink you should know that our friends were listening to the whole conversation."Adora said, before the two heard a loud "Fuck!"coming from Glimmer who was sitting at the top of the staircase. Adora and Catra walked up the stairs to find the rest of their combined friend group sitting there.

"How did you know we were here?"Glimmer questioned standing up from her sitting position.

"You're pretty bad at pretending to be walking away from a door , also 4 pairs of footsteps don't turn into one as soon as the door closes. Why ever are you guys still here. You guys missed a lot of valuable teaching by listening to, whatever that was."Adora questioned her friends.

"Actually me and Entrapta didn't, we were listening remotely this whole time."Bow putted in.

"What?The teachers don't set up virtual calls anymore. How in the hell are you two watching the classes?"Catra questioned, not knowing if she wants the answer or not.

"Oh, Ihave access to the security cameras here at schools for moments like this."Entrapta said as a matter of fact, not seemingly understanding or maybe not even caring how illegal that might be.

"Wait, so you've definitely seen me write these letters at one point?" Adora questioned, completely forgetting that she was supposed to be mad at Glimmer for eavesdropping.

"Oh yeah, Iknew this whole time that it was you, why?"Entrapta answered.

"And you didn't tell me?"Catra question, honestly baf fled.

"What?Ithought we liked the mystery ."Entrapta answered.

"Ok, whatever . We're just wasting time here, come on you two, let's go to math class."Adora said, before giving Catra a quick hug and kiss on her cheek. "I'll see the rest of you during lunch. Bye."Adora said and walked towards the math class, with her two friends in tow.

"I told you so."W as all that Scorpia had to say, before the others left towards their own class.

3 Thursday

Walking from the carpark to the stadium entrance made Catra remember why she never comes to these things. The noise, all the smells, bass of the music and the students stomping on the floorboards of the stands all combined creates one of the most uncomfortable, overstimulating environments possible.

Walking in the hallway built under the stands with Scorpia, Catra had to cover her sensitive ears to block out the sounds of the students above them stomping. Once Scorpia noticed Catra's demeanor, she picked up the pace so the two of them could make it to the doors of the dressing rooms quicker .

"Well, this is where you have to stop, only players allowed. Ican fetch your girlfriend if you have something to say to her."Scorpia said, stopping in front of the door and looking at Catra with a sly smirk.

"Nah, Ill just wait here till you are all done and Ill then find the others over at the stands."Catra said, bouncing back and forth on her feet. Scorpia nodded and waved at Catra before opening the door and stepping inside the dressing room bustling with chatter and nervous players. Catra tried to peek through the door to spot a certain blonde to no avail.

Once the door closed, Catra sighed leaning on the wall opposite from the floor of the stands, taking out her phone to scroll through social media to see what the students were saying about the game.

Catra found a few posts talking about the opposite team and what their scores had beenin previous matches, and other posts about how this was a crucial point in Adora's future as an athlete. Most of the posts though were about how this was the first time Bright Moon had made it to the final and no matter how good the blondie might be, theyll all need some extra encouragement to actually win against The Horde.

"Nah well do well. Iknow it. And even if we dont, just everyone, remember to have fun."Catra heard Adora speaking to her teammates as they all exited the dressing room, pocketing her phone and looking up at the blonde, Catra found the rest of the team staring at her with smirks on their faces.

"Catra, Ididnt expect you to be here. Did you not want to go join the rest of the audience?"Adora asked, ignoring the giggling and whispering happening behind herself. Adora walked closer to Catra, away from the others to give the brunette a hug. While the taller one was approaching her, Catra found herself scanning Adora's captain uniform finding it hard to tear her eyes up back to meet the blonde's.

"Y ou know damn well Inever come to these things. Ill find Entrapta and the others once you go to the field, but for now Im still hiding." Catra said, smiling up at Adora, who was now so close to the shorter one that she had to look up at the her.

"Can confirm!Ihad to basically rope her into coming here today morning."Scorpia suddenly commented, still standing with the other players. Adora chuckled at Scorpias words, closing her eyes gently smilingand shaking her head. When she opened her eyes again and smiled down at Catra, the magikat couldn't help the smile spreading on her own face.

"Ok. We do have to leave soon but before that I just wanted to said hi. So, uhh, yeah. Hi" Adora said and cringed at herself, blushing when the team behind her laughed again.

Catra snickered. Reaching up she pulled Adora down into a kiss. After the short moment, Catra kept herself on her tiptoes and looking into the icy blue eyes, she whispered "Good luck." before letting go and spinning around to walk away. Turning to look back once more before exiting the hallway, Catra shouted. "And Blondie, you better win because I don't date losers."

Adora leaned back to Catra's field of vision from behind a corner and saluted her goobye with a confident smile on her face, before walking out onto the field with her team.

Entering the stands, Catra could hear the crowd go wild when the two teams walked onto the field from their dressign rooms. Watching the two captains of the teams wave at the crowd, Catra checked her chat with Entrapta to locate her friend.

Scanning the area Entrapta said they were at, it didn't take long to spot her friend surrounded by the over excited group of Adora's friend. When Perfuma spotted the brunette, she started waving her hand in the air aggresively to try and catch Catra's attention.

Catra started awkwardly weaving through the crowded stands to make her way to her friend. Finally falling to sit down on the free spot next to Entrapta, Catra took a deep calming breath and turned her focus back onto the field. She could see Adora, Scorpia, Mermista, Lonnie and the rest of the Bright Moon team on the side of the field, while on the other end was The Horde's team.

The brunette kept her eyes on the captain of Bright Moon's team as she was speaking with her teammates. She looked so in her element right there, laughing and excitedly chatting with the others. Adora turned to look at the crowd and quickly spotted Catra in there.

Smiling at her, Catra waved. The Blonde smiled wide and waved back at Catra, causing a lot of girls to squeel around the brunette, them all thinking Adora was waving to them. The blondie laughed and waved at the excited crowd too. Catra rolled her eyes and looked at the opposite team.

Catra knew nothing about University football but tried her best to suss out the competition by analyzing the opposing team. There were a few tall and muscly people, probably the biggest competition. Few of them seemed to be good speed wise and looked to be a challenge to beat. While thinking about the advantages and disadvantages that Catra could think of the other team having, she suddenly felt two palms, one on each of her shoulders.

Catra tensed up and the hair at the back of her neck stood up, but she calmed down and rolled her eyes when she recognized the voice.

"Oh, sorry Cat. We werent trying to scare you." Glimmer spoke as she sat down with her boyfriend on the two empty spots behind Catra. Catra begrudgingly turned around to look at the two people cutting off her train of thought.

"Well hello to you too." Catra spoke in a tired voice. She didnt actually hate Glimmer and Bow, but she would never say that out loud, no way dose.

"Excited for the game? Idont think Iremeber a time Iwas this excited for a game. Imean every game always get's me excited but never like this. Imean this is rare isnt it? Ever since Adora became the captain our team has been thriving. Ithink the last time our team was so good was back in Mara's times. No wonder Adora idolizes her." Glimmer talked animatedly , moving her hands in the air while talking.

"Nah, I don't know much about football. I only came here because Scorpia practically dragged me here with her." Catra said, picking on the gunk under her nails. When she looked back up at the two people talking to her, she noticed the other smirking and the other looking at her with a face of disbelief.

"Y eah, sure. And not because a certain blonde is playing and oh also she is your girlfriend?" Glimmer snarked, raising an eyebrow at Catra. Catra rolled her eyebrows, choosing to ignore her comment and opting to talk to the less energetic snarky of the two.

"What about you Bow? Y ou have a long history of watching these or are you here just tagging along with the others?" Catra asked ignoring the snickering happening next to the boy she was talking to.

"Eh, at first I came here with Seahawk. He was here to cheer for Mermista and then after I got to know Perfuma, Glimmer and the others, I just started pinging them for every game. It' s kind of a group activity now." Bow said, comfortably sitting on the stands, he leaned on his arms as he talked.

"A group activity we can't wait for you to join in!" Perfuma suddenly butted in excitedly . Catra turned to look at her eyes wide, confused. She slowly shook her head and laughed shortly.

"Mhm, nah. Not happening. I don't care who' s playing on that field I'll never start going to all of these." Catra said looking at the field again, seeing the two teams talking to themselves now more serious. The match was probably starting soon.

"A w h, not even for Scorpia? Y ou if anyone knows how much her friend's encouragment means to her." Perfuma attempted. Catra just looked at her with a deadpan look. The two of them stared at each other for a little, the other with puppy eyes and the other bored. Catra groaned and rolled her eyes, giving in.

"Ugh, fine. I'll think about it, or whatever ." She said and turned around on the stands, bringing her focus back to the field. There was some sort of a referee at the middle of the field talking to the captains of the teams. The captains nod and then shake hands before walking back to their respective teams.

"Taking in to consideration the behaviour of both of the teams, it actually seems pretty evenly divided on who could win." Entrapta suddenly said, writing something down into the tablet she's always carrying with her. Catra leans closer to her, still looking at the different teams.

"How do you know that? Looking at them, they all seem pretty serious and nothing else." Catra says, looking down at Entraptas tablet, seeing a bunch of calculations and understanding none of them.

"Oh! By the heartbeat monitors I connected to each of the players." Entrapta answered in an even voice, acting like this a normal Tuesday to her.

"What?" Catra questioned. She was pretty sure that's going to make playing harder, and if that was done with out permission it definitely also was illegal. Looking back at Entrapta, she noticed the purple haired one smirking at herself. Catra's shocked expression dropped to a deadpan one again, when realizing that her friend was only joking.

"Are you kidding. I thought you creeped around sticking machines on their backs for your calculations or something." Catra said and sat back up straight, staring at the field. The players moved to their places while Entrapta and Catra were chatting. Now ready for the game, the referee blows the whistle and the players start moving.

"That does sound like an interesting study to do. See what parts of the match are the most excitement inducing even if the player isn't running. Though I wouldn't creep behind the players, consent is important, especially in experiments." Entrapta said as she followed the players on the field.

"Reading people' s micro expressions and body language is what I'm going by right now. They all seem serious, calm, cool and collected. But the way all of them behave when you look closely will show you that Bright Moon and The Horde both see each other as genuine competition. And since they all obviously know what's needed for a good team, they obviously only feel intimitated by a good team. So yeah, it's hard to really say which team's winning. It' s still extremely interesting!" Entrapta goes over her observations and thoughts while also keeping her eyes on the players. Catra just nodded along, mostly only looking at Adora and Scorpia.

The two girls stopped talking as the game continued, Entrapta pointed out how the players arent doing their most this early in the game, and it's pretty obvious. The players were saving their energy for later into the game when it's really needed. Catra noted how the teams seemed to have good communication inbetween their teammates, she couldnt hear what was being said, over the cheering and shouting of the audience.

The players are quick, dashing around the field after the ball. Adora had never looked as much like a golden retriever then she looked when the ball neared her and she started running towards the opposite teams goal line, kicking the ball to a teammate.

After a while, the both teams had goaled twice. The crowd was still as energetic and loud as ever. Screaming and shouting from excitement and frustration when a team goaled. Adora had yet to score herself, mostly just being the one to kick the ball to a teammate who then kicked the ball into the goal. Catra couldnt really understand how she had so much energy to be so excited for her teammates, maybe that's what makes the blonde such a great captain, though. Jumping around in excitement, picking up the players when they goal, she kept their spirits high and focus sharp.

It was nearing the 45 minute mark, the mid break starting soon, when Adora was running towards the goal, with her own and opposite players running after and next to her . Catra couldnt recount what happened even if she tried, but something happened quickly , and suddenly right before the whistle is blown for the break, the opposite team stole the ball from Adora and scored, making it 3 to 2 for The Horde.

When the whistle was blow and the break started, Adora walked to the side with her teammates, somehow still smiling. The people around Catra started standing up, leaving their stuff to the stands to mark their spots but to also go get some snacks or use the restroom.

Catra stood up with the rest of the group, and walked down the stands. Walking next to Entrapta, she followed the others to the players dressing rooms. As soon as all six of them made it to the dressing rooms door, Scorpia noticed them and pulled Perfuma into a hug. The other Bright Moonn players opened their circle so the six others could join their conversation.

When Perfuma and Scorpia stopped hugging, they stood next to each other, Perfuma holding onto Scorpias bicep. Mermista walked ove to stand next to SeaHawk, leaning on his shoulder and Catra, Entrapta, Glimmer and Bow stood in between Perfuma and SeaHawk.

"That first half so good! You guys are on fire and can definitely come on top from this still!" Perfuma spoke, ecstatic for how the game had gone so far. The players nodded at Perfuma's words, still smiling even though they were one point down right now.

"No definitely . And this break must help, catch your breath, drink something refressing, maybe stretch and then get back on that field and win this game." Bow continued, smiling encouragingly .

"Thanks, and Idefinitely agree! Ibelieve in us even though they just scored." Scorpia spoke, obviously still energetic to continue the match.

While the players start talking with the others, Catra suddenly sucked air in quickly when she felt a forehead on her shoulder and two arms wrapping around her waist. "I need to recharge quickly ." Adora said, burying her face in Catra's neck.

"And, statistically even though the other team is in and advantage right now, from what I've gathered, The Horde rarely has opponents as strong as you guys and they are known to be super cocky. Maybe dumb even. They might get too comfortable now that they are in the lead again and let their guard down. Take advantage of that."As Entrapta explained, Catra felt herself relax against Adora' s chest as the taller girl huged her tight.

"What'd you think?" Adora asks, leaning a little to the right to whisper in the brunette's ear.

"I think you smell, and need a shower . Badly."Catra joked, looking at the talking and laughing people around her but only paying attention to Adora.

In a low quiet voice, Adora laughed into Catra' s ear and gently kicked her in the chin as playful revenge. "Wow, thanks."

"Hmm, you welcome blondie."Catra snarked back, but then rolled her eyes and continued speaking. She leaned her head back against adora's shoulder and a little to the left to look into the blue eyes of the girl behind her. "You guys did well so far. Now just keep up the same energy and I'm sure you'll beat those losers."

That comment got Adora to gently kick Catra in the shin again.

"Hey what was that for! I was complimenting you."Catra spoke through laughter as Adora looked forward at her chatting teammates and friends moving her head to the top of her girlfriend's head.

"Football is about sportmanship. Not about beating someone."Adora answered with a playful smile on her face, glancing down at Catra, her smile widened a little. "But yeah, well beat them, cant risk losing my girlfriend the day after Igot her ."

Catra and Adora joined the conversation the others were having, while waiting for the second half to start. While talking, most of the players were sipping from their waterbottles and stretching. When the game was about to continue, all the players went back into the dressing room to get ready, leaving the six others to walk back over to their places on the stands.

After a while, the match was continuing. All the players seemed to have recharged during the break and were in full force ready to win the game. Adora was giving her all, directing her teammates and keeping everyone in the game. The scores were still 3 to 2 for The Horde but the game was nowhere done yet.

After the first ten minutes, Adora had the ball again, she was weaving through the opposing players, kicking the ball forward. The ball was lost a few times but Adora always got it back and continued on moving it closer to the goal. She kicked the ball to Mermista who kicked it to Lonnie who then served it into the goal, evening out the scores.

The crowd on Bright Moon's side went crazy realizing they were back in the game. Catra had to cover her ears when people all around her started cheering, the sound deafening. Catra locked eyes with Adora who was holding both Lonnie and Mermista up. The blondie smiled up at Catra before continuing to jump around.

The game went on pretty even, the crowd going crazy and then groaning when the ball came close to a goal but then at the last second was kicked out. After the game evened out, it was obvious The Horde had realized that it wasnt going to be as easy to win this as they originally thought and they upped their game.

There were brief team meetings after the game got paused a few times and the gameplay plans changed a few times for both teams. The game was going hard and the players even harder. Some of the players even fell down a couple times. The crazy part being that no matter how clumsy Adora was, she fell down not even once.

On the 35 minute marks, once there was only 10 minutes of the game left one of the players of the opposing team kicked the ball in frustration so hard that it flung in the air, straight into Adora's face.

The game was paused and Adora's teammates ran over to check on her. After continuous assurance from the blonde that she was fine, the game went on. Now, Catra didnt know what, but something about recieving that football to the face was personal to Adora, and she went ruthless.

Only five minutes left of the game, the whistle was blown and the match continued. Mostly keeping her eyes on her teammates, Adora was calculating the moves and what would be the best strategy to win the game.

Leading her team and giving them silent instructions to guide the players, Adora suddenly saw an opportunity now that there wasnt much time left. f she missed this, it would cause them to go over time. But if she scored a point for Bright Moon before the second half ends, she could make her team win.

Running forward, Adora stole the ball from a player who was running right towards her, she kicked the ball forward but when the opposite players were closing in on her, she kicked the ball to Lonnie, who continued kicking it towards to goal. nstead of keeping her eyes on the ball, Adora decided to ran towards the goal line the ball needs to get to. After a little of fighting over the ball, Lonnie kicked the ball to another one of their teammates, who kicked it to Mermista.

"The hrde is too focused on the ball, they dont even see what' s happening around them."Entrapta said leans closer to Catra, then going back to whatever she was calculating on her tablet.

Mermista quickly cathed on what the plan was and kicked the ball to Scorpia, who had a clear field to the goal. She started running full speed ahead, kicking the ball. The Horde gaining on her , with her full force she kicked the ball to Adora who catched the ball on her foot, turned 90 degrees and full force swung the ball towards the goal line.

The goalkeeper of The Horde got ready to catch the ball swinging throug the air. It' s hard to tell if the ball would hit the goalie's hand, go past the goal line or hit the crossbar. It felt like life was moving in slow motion as the ball was nearing the goal line.

The ball touched the goalies finger tips and then like magic it flew into the goal. The people around the stadium stood up screaming in excitement and enragement as the ball went in the net. Catra got shaken by the shoulders by multiple people around her. With only few minutes left of the match there was no way The Horde could even it out.

The last minutes of the game went by pretty quickly . People in the stands celebrating the obvious win, and the players on the field knowing that The Horde cant score anymore. Once the match got whisteled to end, Adora stood at the middle of the field in disbelief. Her teammates ran up to her and all of them started celebrating, jumping around and cheering in excitement.

When the others let Adora out of the crushing team hug and started making their way over to their side of the field, Adora caught Catra's eyes again. Smirking at her, the blondie winked, doing the same two finger salut again.

Once the team got their medals and had all shook hands with the players from The Horde, they made their way back into the dressing room. The excited fans made their way out of the stands, shouting, whooping and whistling in pure happiness. Catra followed the group again to under the stands to the dressing room, waiting outside the door for the winning team.

"I cant believe this! W e actually won. This is the best day of my life." Lonnie spoke when she walked out with two other teammates. The rest of the teammates walked out slowly and as everyone except Scorpia and Adora had walked out, a black haired teammate turned back to look at the friends and said.

"Those two are going to take a while. It's not the smallest of scratches." And then walked out with the other teammates.

"What?" Glimmer asked in confusion, looking at Mermista who was leaning on Seahawk, drying the sweat off her towel.

"You'll see what she's talking about in a bit. But yeah, not that pretty." Mermista said and took a long swig of her waterbottle.

The friends congratulated Mermista on the winning and on scoring a point for the team. As the door opened again and Scorpia walked out. Perfuma walked up to her and planted a kiss on her cheek. "You're very sweaty. But don't worry, I'll fill up the bubble bath when we get to my home. Also, congratulation, love."

"Thanks' s Fuma. That sounds great." Scorpia said, closing her eyes as she leaned against Perfuma still catching her breath after the game.

The others moved in, hugging Scorpia and congratulating before the scorpioni walked over to Catra.

"You did great, big gal. You guys totally dominated that other team. And I bet it was a lonng awaited ego check for them too." Catra said, gently punching the bigger girl on the arm before she was pulled in to a tight hug by her.

"Thanks, Wildcat. Did my best. And my best is enough." Scorpia spoke, leaning now on Catra as she was exhausted. Catra squeezed her back and patted her on the arm as the two of them stopped hugging.

t’ s more than enough. You did great!”Catra said smiling to her friend. Scorpia was about to answer Catra, when suddenly they heard Glimmer’s high pitched shout.

“What happened to you?”Catra looked behind Scorpia to see what Glimmer was shouting for. And there she was, in all her glory. Wearing a sleeveless white top and grey sweatpants, hair down from her signature ponytail, holding an icepack over a bandage on her forehead.

“A football and an angry player are not a good combination when in close proximity.”Adora of fered, flinching when Glimmer removed the icepack to examine the taller one’ s face. Scorpia walked back over to Perfuma and leaned on her while drying herself off.

“Y ou said you were fine. From the stands you seemed fine. So why do you have a bandage on your forehead?”Glimmer questioned, helping Adora by taking the ice pack in her own hand and slowly presses it against her forehead.

“I thought I was fine. I didnt even realize I was bleeding before Octavia, the captain of The Horde, pointed it out to me after the game.”Adora said and then took the icepack back from Glimmer , flinching when she pressed it against her forehead.

The others laughed and shook their heads at Adora. Of course she was so deep in the game that she didn't notice that she was bleeding.

“Ok, now come on. Let’ s go. This place and you three need showers.”Glimmer spoke, pointing at Mermista, Scorpia and Adora. The group started walking out of the hallway, towards the carpark where all of their cars and rides were waiting.

After all of them had chatted a bit longer, they started saying their goodbyes and getting ready to go their own ways. After Catra had said goodbye to Entrapta and Scorpia, and was pulled into a goodbye hug with Mermista by Glimmer, Bow, Perfuma and SeaHawk, she walked over to Adora who was sitting on the trunk of her car, still pressing the icepack againt her forehead.

"You need help with that?" Catra asked, chuckling at the blonde. She looked up at Catra as the brunette was walking closer to her. Her face lit up and a smile spread on her face as the other jumoed up, joining her on the trank of her car.

"Nah, Im fine. Idont really need it anymore, now Im just benefitting over the fact that that it cools me down in this weather."Adora said. Once Catra was in a comfotable position the blondie leaned on her, leaning her heand against the other's and took the icepack away from her forehead.

After a brief silence, the shorter one carefully nudged the taller one and then said. "Congrats to you too, doofus. For the win and the scratch."

Adora chuckled and squeezed the icepack in her hand, turning it over she examined the texton it.

"Thanks. Im proud of myself. Im no baby so a little scratch wont stop me from winning a game. Ipromised my A game and Im going to deliver."Adora said, still leaning on Catra.

"Uhh, excuse me? You definitely are a baby and you just thought itd look cool for you to continue even though you got decked by a ball." Catra said, relaxing against Adora and moving her right hand over to Adora's left one to entwine their fingers.

"Maybe. You definitely thought it was cool, tho."Adora said, squeezing Catra's hand with hers and smiling to herself. The two girl were in their own little bubble, not paying any attention to the rest of their friends. It was silent for a bit, comfortable.

"Oh, by the way! Imade this for you."Adora said, digging in to her spare bag, taking out a note and offering it to Catra. "Open in once you get home, but Ijust thought you might want it."

Catra stared at the letter, smiling at the envelope in her hand as she accepted it from Adora. A thought came to her mind then.

"uh, well actually . Iwas thinking if you'd like to hang out with me? You know, without your or my loud friends and such?" Catra spoke, she dropped the note into her own bag and then stared at the sun that was now starting to set. While Catra was looking forward, Adora leaned forward, reenterin Catra's field of vision.

"Are you asking me out?" She asked with a wide smirk on her face, suddenly confident since Catra was not.

"What? No? No, definitely not? I was just asking. Why do you care anyway, do you want me to ask you out?" Catra said, defensive and pushed Adora's cocky face away from hers, almost pushing the girl off the car.

"Y ou definitely are. That's so cute. Ah, I'm never going to let this go. You asked me out. I'm adding that to my resume too, right under that you like me." Adora said, pushing Catra' s hand away from her face as she spoke and used it as leverage to hold herself up.

"So what? Y ou like me too? And what if I'm asking you out? Y ou wrote me 13 letters about how you like me. I think that' s a bit more serious." Catra continued, still defensive and pushing Adora and her hands away.

Pushing her Catra's arms out of her way, Adora picked her up onto her lap and said in a cocky yet lovestruck voice. "Y eah, but you're Catra. I' s a lot cooler to be asked out by you."

"I'm sorry? Y ou just won our national championships of university football as the captain of the team. I'm pretty sure I know who' s the cooler one of us." Catra said, poking her girlfriend in the forehead and trying to cover her blush and smile with mock frustration.

"Y eah, but to me you're a lot more cooler ." Adora said in a quieter voice. Laying her chin on Catra's shoulder, she looked her in the eyes smiling. Catra doesnt say anything, just staring back as she's trying to come up with a witty answer.

As the two of them just sit there, Catra on Adora's lap, staring at each other, they suddenly hear Glimmer speak.

"Are you two done flirting or should we just give you two more time?" Glimmer teased. Whipping their heads in the direction of their friends, their little bubble burst. Adora eased her hold on Catra and the latter awkwardly jumped off of her lap back on the ground.

"Come on Adora, let's leave. My mom's probably dying to spoil you after today. Now hop in your car and well meet at my house." Glimmer said starting to walk towards the passangers seat of Bow's car.

"Oh, Iactually just agreed to hang out with Catra so not tonight. But Ill see you two soon!" Adora said and stayed seated on her car . Catra looked at her, surprised as Glimmer took out her phone's calendar to decide a date.

Adora smiled at her, still sitting on her car and then turn back to Glimmer. While Adora was looking away, Catra smirked at Glimmer, victorious and then leaned on the trunk of Adora's car.

Ater the friends had said their byes to each other again, Catra and Adora, threw their stuff in Adora's trunk and then got into the front seats.

"So, what do you want to do?" Catra asked, looking at Adora as she started backing out of the carpark and driving.

"W ell Iwas thinking we could just go to my house. Order food, chill, just hang out. Y ou could see it and Icould finally shover?" Adora offered, starting to drive towards her house.

"Y eah, sure. Ithink it could be fun. And you definitely do need a shover." Catra teased, getting comfortable in the passengers seat

Adora drove. Instead of answering, Adora just rolled her eyes and kept driving as Catra turn the radio on to a random channel. The rest of the ride went by, the girls humming and singing some of the songs.

A la detective secreta.

So, yeah... Yesterday was a bit of a disaster. I mean not really but also kind of? Ugh, I don't know. Don't get me wrong I'm happy, I really am. But I also expected that whole thing to go differently? Like maybe I would've told you myself just on a whim some night. I guess I just expected me to tell you.

Now like I said, I am happy. I doubt I would've told you this "early", but also maybe it's better this way? Guess I'm now just feeling a little melancholy that these letter's are ending now. I liked writing them, they felt like a diary I could pour my heart out to, except you were reading them of course. But I guess everything comes to an end eventually. I don't know, I hoped you liked them?

This feels like some sort of a goodbye, and to be honest? I don't really like it. I could fit so many of my thoughts in these letters that I in normal conversations don't even tell. Glimmer or Bow. So stopping writing these. What am i going to do with those thoughts now? They'll just fill my head and I'll go crazy.

Ok, now I'm just over reacting. On a more positive note. I'm so HAPPY that you found out also. Like, now you know, and you like me too. Like what? I'm so confused and suprised and shocked and just happy that you like me too. Kind of feels unreal still.

Everytime I see you, i just kind of want to squeeze your face and kiss you on the forehead and now it's like, ok? I just don't believe it. I might have to test it tomorrow, see what you do if I just kiss you on the forehead. Maybe you'll claw my eyes out but that's worth dying for.

Being brutally honest I kind of just want to bury your face in kisses and have you always smiling. So you know, get ready I guess? Now that sounded wrong. Anyway, I really like you, I'll miss writing these letters and I'll do my best to keep you happy.

Now That You Know ,

- Your Girlfriend, Adora.

An hour later after leaving the stadium, Catra was sitting on Adora's bed while she was in the shover. Adora's dog, Swift Wind was laying next to Catra. Reading the letter over and over , Catra couldn't help but smile. Everything about the situation just made her happy . But especially the way Adora ended the letter. No "Secret Admirer" anymore. Now it's Adora, and not only Adora. Her girlfiend , Adora.

"So, what did you think? I didn't sound too weird, right? I did my best to not let you knowing change the way I write but not being able hide behind a pseudonym anymore makes it hard to say all the stuff that comes to mind."Adora said. She walked into the room, now wearing a fresh set of clothes, a sleeveless, white and yellow, cropped hoodie and red shorts.

Catra once again found herself looking at Adora, as she walked over to her mirror, brushing out her hair. Her outfit nicely showed the girls muscled body which alwas was a plus. After her hair was brushed she took it all in one palm and was about to tie it up on a ponytail, when she suddenly stoped and looked at herself. Catra flipped over on Adora's bed, laying on her back, still staring at the blonde.

Adora, let her hair down, dropped the hair tie on her table and uncertainly styled her hair now that it was down. Suddenly remembering that she was asked a question, Catra decided to answer.

"Nah, I didn't notice anything weird. It was nice. Which actually reminds me, I don't think I've ever told you. I like your notes, and you know, if you'd want, you could could like, continue writing them?"

Catra said looking at Adora in the eyes throught the mirror that blonde was looking into.

Adora met Catra's stare through the mirror and then smiled, continuing to style her damp hair. Placing her hairbrush down on the table, Adora walked over to her bed and dropped on the floor to be on eye level with Catra. The two girls stared at each other again in silence.

"You don't it's not weird even though you now know who writes them?" Adora asked, leaning on her hands crossed on the bed. Catra turned to lay on her side and started absentmindedly playing with a strand of blonde hair.

"No I kind of always imagined it to be you but that was mostly just wistful thinking. Knowing it's you just makes it better." Catra said looking at the strand of hair she was playing with as she spoke.

Leanin her head on her arms and looking at Catra's face so close to her, she noticed herself counting the freckles on her face like stars in the sky. Adora remebers writing something about the same comparison into one of the letters. It was calming, just staring at the speckles on Catra's cheeks and counting them all.

Looking at Catra's face while she was fiddling with a strand of her hair, gave Adora an idea. Standing up and stretching, she offered a hand to Catra before pulling her up from the bed. "Come on, I wanna do something."

Leading Catra over to her beanbag, Adora fell down into it and then pat the floor in front of her. Catra raised and eyebrow but without questioning it more, she sat infront of Adora into a comfortable position. While relaxing, Catra suddenly tensed up again, feeling Adora's hands in her hair. Swift Wind jumped down from the bed, excitedly walking after the girls and sitting in front of Catra.

For a little, Catra was confused on what was happening. What was Adora doing and why. Until Catra recognized the pattern of movement. Adora was braiding Catra's short hair into a french braid. Closing her eyes and enjoying the free massage, Catra let herself relax again, leaning against one of Adora' s legs.

"I always thought your hair would look funny in a braid. I kinda have always wanted to do silly styles with it. But being serious I think a braid could actually suit you alot would you ever have long hair." Adora spoke in a calm voice as she was focused on her graft. Catra just humned as an answer .

"Wish I could say the same thing but all I ever want the to see is you give your scalp a break." Catra said after a moment, with a sly smirk on her face as Adora was being careful with Catra's hair. Adora gently nudged her with the leg she was leaning on but laughed quietly herself too.

"And all I ever hoped would be that you'd learn to take a compliment with out having to follow it with a humorous comment." Adora answered, reaching for a hair tie and carefully tying the braid's end so it doesn't come undone.

"You know I'll never be able to do that, Princess. Snarky comments and come backs are just my nature." Catra said, leaning her head back to look Adora in the eyes and smirk up at her.

"And you know I won't stop trying." Adora responded, leaning down and pressing a kiss on her girlfriend's forehead, pushing the short hair out of the way.

Catra just smiled up at her , then turning around to kiss her girlfriend better. Placing a hand of her jaw , Adora kept Catra close to her as she kissed her back. After they broke it off, Adora placed both of her hands on Catra's jawline and started pressing a bunch of kisses on her face causing the other to playfully push her away.

"Bleh, stop that. I didn't ask for this attack. I'll sue you for all you have and then win and leave victorious." Catra said, laughing through it, pretending to hate the situation. Adora pressed a few more pecks on her face before smiling to herself and turning her attention back to Catra's short hair, styling the braid in with the rest.

"There, now it looks good and youll stay as fierce as ever ."Adora said kissing Catra on the forehead quickly again before sitting back into a comfortable position on the bean bag. "And you didnt even gouge my eyes out, Icall that a win."

"Ok, come on lazy . You promised me food. Im getting hungry and Im not eating you. Catra said taking both of Adora' s hand tried to pull the athlete up from the bean bag. Catra noticed Adora smirking at her, eyebrows raised and holding in her laughter.

"Y ou know what?Y ou and your bad humor can stay here, Ill go order food myself."Catra said, giving up on trying to pull up the other.

In a swift movement requiring zero percent of Adora' s strength, the blonde pulled Catra down onto her lap by the hand. The squeal Catra voiced caused Adora to laugh loudly as she place both arms under Catra, one under her knees and the other to support her back.

"Y ou love it. And my humor. And this."Adora said, standing up with Catra in her hands. Iwalked in to her living room of her small appartment, avoiding Swift Wind who was running around her legs excitedly , and placed Catra down on the sofa.

Looking down at the grumpy girl sitting on her sofa, Adora couldnt help but laugh. She bent down on eye level with Catra and then, holding in her laugh, she asked. "And what would you like to eat today, since Im of f the table?Should Iorder pizza?"

Catra stared at Adora, deadpan for a second, before rolling her eyes and then answering. "Y eah, sure that sounds fun. Tell me what youll want and Ill write you a list."

The two of them put on some random movie, chatting while waiting for their foods and chatting while eating. Every little thing Adora said and heard, caused her to laugh and every laugh Catra heard just made her like the blonde sitting next to her more. After they had both eaten, they just sat on Adora' s couch sometimes saying something and the falling back into a comfortable silence again. Swift Wind was laying on the floor next to the sofa, asleep.

As Adora was laying on her back on the sofa, Catra found herself looking towards her a couple times. Watching the TV, she found herself wanting to cuddle Adora. God how she hated how this girl could make her feel so vulnurable by just laying next to her . While zoning out on the TV , she was suddenly dragged out of her thoughts by Adora sitting up and poking her in the cheek.

"You're thinking so loud you're practically talking to yourself. What' s up?" Adora asked, leaning her head on her arms that were resting on her knees. Catra kept her stare at the TV, thinking over her thoughts.

"Ugh, I hate talking about my feelings and feeling vulnerable." Catra mumbled, burying her face against her knees that were pulled against her chest. Adora took a deep breath, thinking. She then started slowly running her hands through Catra's hair.

"Yeah, I'm pretty sure we both have that problem. But it' s me. I'm not going to go running around telling everyone." Adora said, softly running her hand agaist Catra's ear and then through her hair again as she spoke.

Catra side eyed Adora from where her face was with no actual malice in it. Adora leaned back a bit, crossing her legs on the sofa and opening her arms for a hug when she notice Catra looking at her. Catra thought for a second before letting her own wants take over as she wrapped herself around Adora and with her body wheight pushed the two of them back to laying.

The movie completely forgotten, Adora wrapped her arms aroung Catra and turned to lay on her side, making sure that Catra doesn fall off. When Catra suddenly buries her face in Adora's neck, the blonde starts running her hand through Catra's short again, giving the other the time and space to talk when she was ready.

The two girls just laid there in silence for a bit. Adora helping Catra calm her nerves, and Catra enjoying the closeness she rarely accepts or recieves. As they are cuddling, Catra suddenly speaks, voice muffeled by Adora's neck and hair. "I just didn't want to ask for this. I don't know why but I over thinked it and convinced myself you'd just push me away ."

"A wh, Catra. I would never do such thing. Y ou know whenevver you need it you can hold me or whatever. It' s not something to feel ashamed of."Adora chuckled before speaking, tightening the embrace she held Catra in. Hugging her close and running her hands through Catra's hair, she pressed a kiss to Catra's cheek and then just laid there with her .

After the sun had fully set and the night had started, Adora was still holding Catra. They had moved from laying on their sides to Catra laying on top of Adora on her stomach, arms around Adora's waist, as Adora was laying on her back, her muscled arms around Catra's shoulders as the two of them were watching the TV.

"W e should probably head to sleep. Before we fall asleep here." Adora said, pushing Catra's hair out of her face as the brunette yawned. Catra opened her eyes again, smiling down at Adora and then speaking. "So you chose that I'm sleeping over?"

"I can drive you home if you want but I'm pretty sure Scorpia and her parents wouldn't appreciate you coming home this late."Adora offered, sitting up and setting Catra to sit in front of her. Adora yawned herself and stretched her upper body, before looking back at Catra.

"Nah, Ill just stay over , if you dont mind."Catra said, rubbing her eyes and then standing up, stretching her whole body.

"No, Idefinitely dont. Ihave an extra toothbrush in the bathroom and Ican borrown you some clothes."Adora said, standing up and walking into her bedroom, opening her closet and searched for other clothes then her signature football jacket, white compression shirt and grey pants. Finding a long black and red shirt, she handed it to Catra, and then headed to her bathroom to brush her teeth, while Catra changed.

After brushing their teeth and getting ready for bed other wise, Catra left Adora in the bathroom and walked towards the bedroom, exhausted. Falling on Adora's bed, Catra wrapped herself in the sheets and took out her phone as she waited for Adora.

After notifying Scorpia's mothers that she was staying the night, checking the recent conversations in her schools chat page and turning off her alarms for tomorrow, Catra realized that Adora hadnt yet joined her . Expecting the doofus to have fallen asleep in the bathroom, Catra got out of bed and started walking to where she expeted to find her sleeping girlfriend.

On the way there though, Catra suddenly noticed Adora standing, staring out the windows in her living room wide awake. The brunette slowly walked over to the blondie and stopped, standing next to her .

"What are you doing?"Catra asked, looking outside but not seeing anything remarkable. Adora stares at Catra in disbelief before realizing why the other couldnt understand her excitement.

"Youre looking at the wrong place."Adora softly spoke, lifting Catra's stare from the ground to the sky, where she saw it. The night sky was covered in stars, Catra appreaciated the stars a bit longer, before turnign her focus to the more mesmerising sight. Looking at Adora, eyes wide, smiling happily the stars reflecting on her blue eyes.

"I really do need to take you to that spot with Swift Wind some day. It's such a stunning place and the stars there are the brightest I've ever seen them." Adora said, turning to Catra and meeting her eyes with a wide smile on her face, before turning back to looking at the sky.

"Hmm, maybe you do. Would be interesting to see the place you gushed over so much." Catra said, humming. Stepping closer to the blonde, she wrapped her arm around her waist and leaned against her said. Catra yawned and then turn back at the sky, enjoying the moment.

"Time for bed?" Catra asked, exhausted. Looking up at her girlfriend, she humned when she felt Adora's hand wrap around her waist too.

"In a second. You can go already but I really want to enjoy the scenery since it's so bright right now." Adora said, running her hand up and down Catra's back, while looking at the brightly shining stars.

"Nah, I can wait." Catra responded, leaning back against Adora, and enjoying the stars more. In this moment, Catra found herself looking forward to the days with Adora. Honestly, she couldn't wait for Valentines day. Maybe it wasn't as bad...

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading!
So, what'd you think of the chapter? Of the story?

I just want to explain quickly why I was gone so long. I lost interest in She-ra around Christmas and got super unmotivated to continue this story. Now, even tho I'm not back in my hyperfixation, this story was still important to me and I hate nothing more than unfinished stories. So even after all that, I'm still back with the last chapter!

Comments and kudos are highly appreciated!
Hope you enjoyed it!
